THE LIFE OF HIUEN - TSIANG

BY

SHAMAN HWUI LI

WITH AN INTRODUCTION CONTAINING AN ACCOUNT OF THE WORKS OF I-TSING

BY

SAMUEL BEAL

B.A., D.C.L.

PROFESSOR OF CHINESE, UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON

WITH A PREFACE BY

L. CRANMER - BYNG

AND

WITH APPENDICES CONTAINING ITINERARY OF YUAN-CHWANG, AND TWO MAPS

BY

VINCENT A. SMITH

M R.A.S

ALSO

A BIOGRAPHICAL STUDY OF HIUEN-TSIANG

BIBLOGRAPHY & INDEX

BY

Dr. RAJENDRA RAM

M.A., Ph.D.

ACADEMICA ASIATICA

DELHI-110006 INDIA

New Edition, 1911
Popular Re-issue, 1914

The rights of translation and of reproduction are reserved

A PROLEGOMENON

Books published fifty years or earlier are hardly available to common readers. Their old copies lying in the libraries are generally birttled and in many cases tottered. Many publishers of repute have come in the field to reprint such books as are old and rare for meeting the needs of intellectuals. Several reprinters have emerged in the field as the enterprise is lucrative. However, least care is generally taken to supplement these old books with further improved materials and additional researches done in the fields with which they are actually concerned. ACADEMICA ASIATICA (PATNA-6) has come up with a mission to serve the inquisitive readers, researchers and intellectuals by reprinting old and rare volumes on History.

The present title The Life of Hiuen-Tsiang by the Shaman Hwui Li with an Introduction containing an account of the works of I-Tsing by Samuel Beal with a preface by L. Cranmer-Byng, London, was first published in 1884. Its new edition was published in 1911 and the same edition was re-issued as its popular one in 1914. The learned translator of this work, Samuel Beal had already published Si-Yu-Ki Buddhist Records of the Western World translated from the Chinese of Hiuen-Tsiang (A. D. 629), a few months earlier than The Life of Hiuen-Tsiang. The Si-Yu-Ki appeared with a map, comprehensive foot-notes and forty-three pages of Index. However, neither satisfactory foot-notes nor an index could be added to The Life of Hiuen-Tsiang, although its demand in the world of inquisitive readers was so much that it had to be published twice after its original appearance in 1884. Another work of this type on Yuan-

This zeal for following the remotest ancestors over the borders of history into the regions of fable may be largely ascribed to a very human desire to connect the stream of life with its divine source. We are chiefly concerned to know that he came of a family which had already given notable men to the State, and was launched "in the troublous whirl of birth and death" but a little distance from the town of Kou-Shih, in the province of Honan, in the year 600 A.D. Here and there biography leaves us a glimpse of his outward appearance as boy and man. We are told that "at his opening life he was rosy as the evening vapours and round as the rising moon. As a boy he was sweet as the odour of cinnamon or the vanilla tree." A soberer style does justice to his prime, and again he comes before us, "a tall handsome man with beautiful eyes and a good complexion. He had a serious but benevolent expression and a sedate, rather stately manner." The call of the West came early to Hiuen-Tsiang. From a child he had easily outstripped his fellows in the pursuit of knowledge, and with the passing of the years he stepped beyond the narrow limits of Chinese Buddhism and found the deserts of Turkestan between him and the land of his dreams. Imperfect translations from the Sanscrit, the limited intelligence of the Chinese priesthood, the sense of vast truths dimly perceived obscurely set forth, the leaven of his first Confucian training—all contributed to the making of a Buddhist pilgrim. The period of his departure, 629 A.D., was an eventful one for China. T'ai-Tsung, the most powerful figure of the brilliant T'ang dynasty, sat on the throne of his father Kaotsu, the founder of the line. The nomad Tartars, so long the terror of former dynasties, succumbed to his military genius, and Kashgaria was made a province of the Empire. Already the kingdom of Tibet was tottering to its fall, and Corea was to know the devastation of war within her boundaries. Ch'ang-an was now the capital, a city of floating pavilions and secluded gardens, destined to become the centre of a literary movement that would leave its mark for all time. But the days were not yet when the terraces of Teng-hiang-ting would see the butterflies alight on the flower-crowned locks of Yang-kuei-fei, or the green vistas re-echo to the voices of poet and emperor joined in praise of her. Only two wandering monks emerge furtively through the outer gates of the city's triple walls, and one of them looks back for a glimpse of Ch'ang-an, the last for sixteen eventful years of exile.

Others had crossed the frontier before him, notably Fa-hian and Sung Yun, others in due course would come and go, leaving to posterity their impressions of a changing world, but this man stands alone, a prince of pilgrims, a very Bayard of Buddhist enthusiasm, fearless and without reproach. As we read on through the pages of Hwui-li the fascination of the Master of the Law becomes clear to us, not suddenly, but with the long, arduous miles that mark the way to India and the journey home.

Take the Master's tattered robes, let the winds of Gobi whistle through your sleeve and cut you to the bone, mount his rusty red nag and set your face to the West. In the night you will see "firelights as many as stars" raised by the demons and goblins; travelling at dawn you will behold "soldiers clad in fur and felt and the appearance of camels and horsemen and the glittering of standards and lances; fresh forms and figures changing into a thousand shapes, sometimes at an immense distance, then close at hand, then vanished into the void." The time comes when even the old red steed avails not, the Great Ice Mountains loom in front of you, and you crawl like an ant and cling like a fly to the roof of the world. Then on the topmost summit, still far away from the promised land, you realise two things—the littleness of human life, the greatness of one indomitable soul.

But the superman is also very human. With the vast bulk of his encyclopædic knowledge he falls on the pretentious monk Mokshagupta, he flattens him and treads a stately if heavy measure on his prostrate body. And withal clear-sighted and intolerant of shams, he is still a child of his age and religion With childish curiosity he tempts a bone to foretell the future, and with childish delight obtains the answer he most desires. In the town of Hiddha is Buddha's skull bone, one foot long, two inches round "If anyone wishes to know the indications of his guilt or his religious merit he mixes some powdered incense into a paste, which he spreads upon a piece of silken stuff, and then presses it on the top of the bone according to the resulting indications the good fortune or ill fortune of the man is determined" Hiuen obtains the impression of a Bôdhi and is overjoyed, for, as the guardian Brahman of the bone explains, "it is a sure sign of your having a portion of true wisdom (Bôdhi)" At another time he plays a kind of religious quoits by flinging garlands of flowers on the sacred image of Buddha, which, being caught on its hands and arms, show that his desires will be fulfilled In simple faith he tells Hwui-li how Buddha once cleaned his teeth and flung the fragments of the wood with which he performed the act on the ground; how they took root forthwith, and how a tree seventy feet high was the consequence And Hiuen saw that tree, therefore the story must be true

But it is not with the pardonable superstitions of a human soul of long ago that we need concern ourselves The immense latent reserve, the calm strength to persist, is the appeal It comes to us with no note of triumph for the thing accomplished or the obstacle removed, but rather underlies some simple statement of fact and is summed up in these few trite words: "We advanced guided by observing the bones left on the way." The little incidents of life and death are as nothing to one who looks on all men as ghosts haunted by reality. And so the Master of the Law resigns himself to the prospect of a violent end at the hands of the river pirates of the Ganges, to the miraculous interposition of a timely storm, with the same serenity with which he meets the long procession streaming out of Nâlanda in his honour, with its two hundred priests and some thousand lay patrons who surround him to his entry, recounting his praises, and carrying standards, umbrellas, flowers, and perfumes

Yet there are moments of sheer delight when scenes of physical beauty are fair enough to draw even a Buddhist monk from his philosophic calm, when even Hiuen-Tsiang must have become lyrical in the presence of his recording disciple Who would not be the guest of the abbot of Nâlanda monastery with its six wings, each built by a king, all enclosed in the privacy of solid brick? "One gate opens into the great college, from which are separated eight other halls, standing in the middle (of the monastery) The richly adorned towers, and the fairy-like turrets, like pointed hilltops, are congregated together The observatories seem to be lost in the mists (of the morning), and the upper rooms tower above the clouds

"From the windows one may see how the winds and the clouds produce new forms, and above the soaring eaves the conjunctions of the sun and moon may be observed.

"And then we may add how the deep, translucent ponds bear on their surface the blue lotus intermingled with the Kanaka flower, of deep red colour, and at intervals the Amra groves spread over all, their shade

"All the outside courts, in which are the priests' chambers, are of four stages. The stages have dragon-projections and coloured eaves, the pearl-red pillars, carved and ornamented, the richly adorned balustrades, and the roofs covered with tiles that reflect the light in a thousand shades, these things add to the beauty of the scene"

Here ten thousand priests sought refuge from the world of passing phenomena and the lure of the senses.

Wherever our pilgrim goes he finds traces of a worship far older than Buddhism He does not tell us so in so many words, yet underneath the many allusions to Bôdhi-trees and Nāgas we may discover the traces of that primitive tree and serpent worship that still exists in remote corners of India, as, for instance, among the Nāga tribes of Manipur who worship the python they have killed In Hiuen's time every lake and fountain had its Nāga-râja or serpent-king Buddha himself, as we learn from both the Si-yu-ki and the Life, spent much time converting or subduing these ancient gods There were Nāgas both good and evil When Buddha first sought enlightenment he sat for seven days in a state of contemplation by the waters of a little woodland lake Then this good Nāga "kept guard over Tathâgata, with his folds seven times round the body of the Buddha, he caused many heads to appear, which overshadowed him as a parasol, therefore to the east of this lake is the dwelling of the Nāga" In connection with this legend it is interesting to remember that Vishnu is commonly represented as reposing in contemplation on the seven-headed snake. Even after the passing of the Buddha the Nāgas held their local sway, and King Asoka is foiled in his attempt to destroy the Nāga's stûpa, for, "having seen the character of the place, he was filled with fear and said, 'All these appliances for worship are unlike anything seen by men.' The Nāga said, 'If it be so, would that the king would not attempt to destroy the stûpa!' The king, seeing that he could not measure his power with that of the Nāga, did not attempt to open the stûpa (to take out the relics)" In many instances we find the serpent gods not merely in full possession of their ancient haunts, but actually posing as the allies and champions of the new faith and its founder. In the Si-yu-ki we are told that "by the side of a pool where Tathâgata washed his garments is a great square stone on which are yet to be seen the trace-marks of his robe. . . . The faithful and pure frequently come to make their offerings here; but when the heretics and men of evil mind speak lightly of or insult the stone, the dragon-king (Nâga-râja) inhabiting the pool causes the winds to rise and rain to fall"

The connection between Buddhism and tree-worship is even closer still The figure of the Master is for ever reclining under the Bôdhi-tree beneath whose shade he dreamed that he had "the earth for his bed, the Himalayas for his pillow, while his left arm reached to the Eastern Ocean, his right to the Western Ocean, and his feet to the great South Sea." This Bôdhi-tree is the Ficus Religiosa or peepul tree, and is also known as Rajasvit or the tree of wisdom and knowledge. The leaves are heart-shaped, slender and pointed, and constantly quivering. In the Si-yu-ki it is stated of a certain Bôdhi-tree that although the leaves wither not either in winter or summer, but remain shining and glistening throughout the year, yet "at every successive Nirvâna-day (of the Buddhas) the leaves wither and fall, and then in a moment revive as before." The Buddha sat for seven days contemplating this tree; "he did not remove his gaze from it during this period, desiring thereby to indicate his grateful feelings towards the tree by so looking at it with fixed eyes." Hiuen-Tsiang himself and his companions contributed to the universal adoration of the tree, for, as that impeccable Buddhist the Shaman Hwui-li rather baldly states, "they paid worship to the Bôdhi-tree."

How did Buddhism come to be connected in any way with tree and serpent worship? The answer is, through its connection with Brahmanism. As Buddhism was Brahmanism reformed, so Brahmanism in its turn was the progressive stage of tree and serpent worship. Siva the destroyer is also Nág Bhushan, "he who wears snakes as his ornaments" Among the lower classes in many districts the worship of the serpent frequently supplants or is indistinguishable from the worship of Siva In the Panma Puráns, the Bôdhi-tree is the tree aspect of Vishnu, the Indian fig-tree of Pudra, and the Palasa tree of Brahma Again, Vishnu is also Hari the Preserver —Hari who sleeps upon a coiled serpent canopied by its many heads The Laws of Manu lay down the worship to be offered both to the water-gods (Nāgas) and the tree spirits —"Having thus, with fixed attention, offered clarified butter in all quarters . . . let him offer his gifts to animated creatures, saying, I salute the Maruts or Winds, let him throw dressed rice near the door, saying, I salute the water-gods in water, and on his pestle and mortar, saying, I salute the gods of large trees"

The tree and the serpent coiled at its roots are the two essential symbols of primitive religion, whether the tree is the peepul and the serpent a Nāga-râja, or the serpent be the Tiamat of the Babylonians and the tree the date-palm There are the serpent-guarded fruits of the Hesperides; there is the serpent beneath the tree of knowledge in the garden, or rather grove, of Eden; there is Yggdrasill, the sacred ash tree of Norse mythology, with Nidhogg the great serpent winding round its roots. The first mysteries of religion were celebrated in groves, as those of Asher and Baal and the groves of the early Romans.

Serpent-worship has universally been the symbol-worship of the human desire for life, the consequent reproduction of the species, and hence the immortality of the race. To-day the barren women of Bengal pay reverence to the person of the Nāga mendicant But the worship of trees takes its rise from the emotions of primæval man, inspired in the forest Fear and awe and the passions all dwelt in its shade. The first god of man emerging from the animal is Pan, and his the woodnote that, calling through the sacred grove, causes the new-found conscience to start and the guilty to hide their shame.

But in pointing out the survivals of ancient faith so naïvely testified to by Hiuen-Tsiang, I have intended no disparagement to the gentle, compassionate Master of the Eastern World Buddha could not have planted any tree that the jungles of India would not have swiftly strangled in one tropic night He sought for Brahmanism, that giant of the grove, the light and air for which it pined, he cleared the creepers that would have closed it in, he cut away the dead and dying branch and gave the tree of ancient faith its chance of attainment And if he left the old wise Nāgas to their woodland lakes, or paid silent recognition to the spirit of the Bôdhi-tree, who shall blame him? Man the primitive, with his fresh mind brought to bear upon the mysteries around him, with all senses alert to catch the rhythmic pulses of life and view the silent growth that soared beyond him, with his imagination unfettered and his garb of convention as yet unsewn, was nearer to the great dawn than all the book-bound philosophers that followed him.

But Hiuen-Tsiang or Yuan Chwāng, for such is the latest rendering of his name in the modern Pekinese, was born into a world that beheld the tree of Buddhism slowly dying from the top. He bore witness, if unconsciously, to a time of transition and a noble faith in decay, and the swift, silent growth of jungle mythology around the crumbling temples of Buddha. His record of these sixteen years of travel is a priceless one, for through it we are able to reconstruct the world and ways of Buddhist India of the centuries that have passed. Yet far more priceless still is that record, read between the lines, of a human soul dauntless in disaster, unmoved in the hour of triumph, counting the perils of the bone-strewn plain and the unconquered hills as nothing to the ideal that lay before him, the life-work, the call of the Holy Himalayas and the long toil of his closing years. It is difficult to over-estimate his services to Buddhist literature He returned to his own country with no less than 657 volumes of the sacred books, seventy-four of which he translated into Chinese, while 150 relics of the Buddha, borne by twenty horses, formed the spoil reverently gathered from the many lands we call India.

And so we leave him to his rest upon Mount Sumeru, where once his venturous soul alighted in the dreams of youth, with the serpents coiled beneath its base, with its seven circling hills of gold and the seven seas between, and the great salt ocean encompassing them all There, as Mr Watters has finely said, "he waits with Maitreya until in the fulness of time the latter comes into this world. With him Yuan-chuang hoped to come back to a new life here and to do again the Buddha's work for the good of others" Till then we leave him to the long interval of bliss transcending all planes of human ecstasy

"Around his dreams the dead leaves fall,
Calm as the starred chrysanthemum
He notes the season glories come,
And reads the books that never pall"

L CRANMER-BYNG

May 16th, 1911.

Turks—Receives many Turks into the priesthood — Intrigues at Kunduz—Śramana named Dharmasiṅha—The Navasangharama—The two Stûpas at Po-li—Jumadha and Juzgana—Enters the great Snowy Mountains—Passes the Snowy Mountains—Arrives at Bâmiyân—Relics of Sanakavasa—The Temple of Sha lo-kia—The concealed treasure—Finds the treasure—Arrives at Lamghan—History of Dipañkara Buddha—Relics at Hidda—The cave of Nagaraja Gopâla—The Cave of the Shadow—Beholds the Shadow—Stûpa built by Kanishka—A statue of white stone—Arrives at the town of Utakhanda—Enters the country of U-chang na—The river Subhavâstu—The fountain of Apalala—The wooden statue of Maitreya Bodhisattva—Bodhisattva born as Chandraprabha—Temple of U sse-kia lo (Hushkara)—Arrives at the capital of Kasmir Explains various Śâstras—The Council of Kanishka—Sâstras engraved on copper—Attacked by brigands—The forest of amra trees—Arrives at the kingdom of Tcheka—Converts the heretics—Resides in the convent of Tu she-sa na—Reaches Mathura—The River Ganges—The Sangharama of Gunaprabha—Sañghabhadra composes the Kosha-Karika Sâstra—The ladders of Kapitha—Arrives at Kie-jo kio she kwo (Kanauj) — Saladitya Harshavardhana — Resides at the Bhadra Vihâra . . Pp 35-84

BOOK III

Asangha's ascent to heaven—His brother Vasubandhu—Attacked by brigands—Prepared as a sacrifice—His miraculous escape—Conversion of the brigands—The field of Great Beneficence—Buddha's ascent into heaven—Arrives at the kingdom of Śrâvastî—Sacred spots at Srâvastî—The Vihâra Sanghârâma—Kapilavastu—The Naga tank—Kusinagara—The "Stag-desert"—Sacred spots at Banaras—Arrives at the kingdom of Chen-chu (Ghazipur)—Pataliputtra Pura—The stone upon which Buddha stood after leaving Vâisalî—The Bodhimanda—The Bôdhi-tree—Enters Nalanda—Salutes Ching fa tsong (Silabadra)—Pays worship to Maitreya Bôdhisattva—Provisions at Nâlanda—The Nâlanda monastery—Structure of Nâlanda—The Sañghârâmas of India—Srigupta—Bamboo garden of Karanda—The first convocation—Ananda repeats the Sûtras—Bimbasara's decree—Jyôtishka, the nobleman—The Hamsa convent—The image of Avalôkitêśvara—Origin of Indian letters—Vyâkaranam treatises—Sanskrit grammar—The Subanta "sound (endings")—Arrives at the Kapotika convent—Offers flowers and vows to the figure of Avalôkitêśvara -Buildings at Hiranya . . . Pp 85-127

BOOK IV.

Arrives at Champâ—The fairy fruit—Karnasuvarna—Arrives at Samatata—Green jade figure of Buddha—Simhala—Tooth of Buddha—Deva Bodhisattva—The kingdom of Dhanakataka—Bhavaviveka—Birthplace of Dharmapâla Bodhisattva—Priests from Ceylon—The Chandanêva tree—The Lion-king—Death of the Lion-king—The Western women—Padmaraga jewel—Lankagiri—Arrives at Mahârâshtra—Mahârâshtra—King Silâditya of Ujjain arrives at Vallabhi—The country of Po la-sse—Arrives at Sindh—U-ga-tsun (The Sun-god)—The Kshattriya Jayasena—The dream of Hiuen Tsiang—The Sarira miracle—Composes a Sâstra called Hwui Tsung—The Sky-flower doctrine—Letter sent to Silabhadra—The Lokâtiya disputant—The heretics called Sañkhyas and others—The Sankhya system—The heretics are overcome—Kumara-raja Pp 128-165

BOOK V.

Nirgiantha skilled in divination—The resolve to return—Silabhadra approves—Silabhadra receives the letter—Proceeds to Kumara-raja—Arrives at Kie shu ho ki lo—Siladitya raja, and the king of Ts'in—Interview with Siladitya—Sammatîya-school doctrine—Ceremonial at meeting-place—An offering to Buddha—The challenge of Hiuen Tsiang—The tooth of Buddha—The sick elephant—Conclusion of the Assembly—Arrives at the kingdom of Po-lo-ye-kia—The Arena of Charity—Bestowal of gifts—He delays his return—Takes his departure—Arrives at Pi lo na-na—Crosses the Indus—The king of Kapiśa proceeds homewards—Arrives at Kunduz—Habits of the people of Hi-mo-ta-lo—Reaches Sambhi—The Central Lake—Kumaralabdha—Meets with robbers—The entranced Arhat—Kustana—The country of Kashgar—Figure of Buddha—Arrives at Khotan—The Arhat from Kaśmir—The first Sangharama—Memorial for books—Letter sent to Ko-chang—Receives letters of instructions—The Takla Makán desert—Sends letter to the Emperor Pp 166-212

CONCLUSION.

Arrives at the capital—Begins to translate the Sanscrit books he had brought—Resides at a temple called Si-ming—Death of the pilgrim—Is buried in the Western capital—His remains afterwards removed . . . . . Pp. 213-218

APPENDICES —

I The Itenerary of Yuan—Chwang (Hiuen - Tsiang) with two maps by Vincent A Smith Pp 219-231

II Hsuan—Tsāng (A D 600-64) A Biographical Study by Rajendra Ram P p 235-264

III Bibliography by Rajendra Ram P p 265-267

IV Index by Rajendra Ram P p 268-316

HISTORY

OF THE

EARLY LIFE OF HIUEN-TSIANG.

INTRODUCTION.

1 THE present volume is intended to supplement the "History of the Travels of Hiuen-Tsiang" (Si-yu-ki), already published by Messrs Trubner in two volumes, and entitled "Buddhist Records of the Western World"

The original from which the translation is made is styled "History of the Master of the Law of the three Pitakas of the 'Great Loving-Kindness' Temple." It was written, probably in five chapters, in the first instance by Hwui-li, one of Hiuen-Tsiang's disciples, and afterwards enlarged and completed in ten chapters by Yen-thsong, another of his followers.[1] Yen-thsong was selected by the disciples of Hwui-li to re-arrange and correct the leaves which their master had written and hidden in a cave He added an introduction and five supplementary chapters. The five chapters added by Yen-thsong are probably those which follow the account of Hiuen-Tsiang's return from India, and relate to his work of translation in China. I have not thought it necessary to reproduce this part of the original; my object has been simply to complete the "Records" already published relating to India.

[1] Julien, Preface to the Life of Hiouen-Tsang, p. lxxix.

2 It will be found that Hwui-li's history often explains or elucidates the travels of Hiuen-Tsiang Yen-thsong evidently consulted other texts or authorities. This is especially the case in reference to the history of the Temple of Nâlanda, in the third chapter of the book, compared with the ninth book of the "Records"[1]

3 I may also notice the interesting statement found in the fourth book, referring to King Sadvaha (So-to-po-ho), and the rock temple he excavated for Nâgârjuna[2]

Nâgârjuna is now believed to have flourished as late as 100 years after Kanishka,[3] i.e., towards the end of the second century A D This would also be the date of Sadvaha Who this king was is not certain He is said to have reigned over Shing-tu, which may simply mean India He was surnamed Shi-yen-to-lia (Sindhuka?) He probably had resided on the Indus, and by conquest had got possession of the Southern Kôsala. Was he a Pallava? and was Alamana, where Nâgârjuna knew him, the same as Aramana on the Coromandel Coast, between Chôla and Kalinga?[4] Be that as it may, we know that Nâgârjuna was so closely acquainted with the king that

[1] With respect to Tathâgata-Râja, e.g., the phrase used in the original does not mean "his son," but "his direct descendant," and this goes far to reconcile this account with that found in the Si yu-ki

Again, with reference to the remark of Hwui-li found on page 112 infra, that the Nâlanda monastery was founded 700 years before the time of Hiuen Tsiang, this, as I have observed (in the note), clears up the date of Śakrâditya, who is described as a former king of the country, living after the Nirvâna of Buddha, the expression "not long after," found in the Si yu-ki, must be accepted loosely The foundation of the convent would be about 80 B.C.

[2] I think it is abundantly clear from the evidence of Chinese traditions that the Patriarch Nâgârjuna and the Bhikshu Nâgasena (who disputed with Menander) are distinct persons The first (as I have shown in some papers written for the Indian Antiquary) was an innovator and more or less given to magical practices, the latter was a learned Bhikshu engrossed in metaphysical studies

[3] So says Taou-Sün in his history of the Sâkya family

[4] For some remarks on this point, vide Indian Antiquary, May 1888, p 126, c 1 Cf also Schiefner's Taranatha, p. 303

he sent him a friendly letter exhorting him to morality of life and religious conduct The king in return prepared the cave-dwelling for him of which we have the history in the tenth book of the "Records" This cave-dwelling was hewn in a mountain called Po-lo-mo-lo-ki-li, i e., Bhramarâgiri, the mountain of the Black bee (Durgâ)[1]

Dr Burgess has identified this mountain with the celebrated Śri Śailas, bordering on the river Kistna, called by Schiefner Çri-Parvata Doubtless it is the same as that described by Fa-hian in the 35th chapter of his travels He calls it the Po-lo-yue Temple, which he explains as "the Pigeon" (Pâravat) monastery But a more probable restoration of the Chinese symbols would be the Parvatî, or the Parvata, monastery The symbol yue in Chinese Buddhist translations is equivalent to va (or vat)[2]

We may therefore assume that the Po-lo-yue monastery of Fa-hian was the Durgâ monastery of Hiuen-Tsiang, otherwise called Śri-parvata. This supposition is confirmed by the actual history of the place, for Hiuen-Tsiang tells us that after the Buddhists had established themselves in the monastery, the Brahmans by a stratagem took possession of it. Doubtless, when in possession, they would give it a distinctive name acceptable to themselves, hence the terms Bhramarâ or Bhramarâmba.

4 With respect to Fa-hian's restoration of Po-lo-yue to

[1] M Julien restores these symbols to Baramoulagiri, and accepts the interpretation given by Hiuen-Tsiang, viz, "the black peak" Before I had been able to consult any parallel record I was satisfied that this restoration was wrong, and in a paper read before the Royal Asiatic Society, J R A S, vol xv part 3, I ventured to assert that the Chinese character "fung," "a peak," was a mistake for "fung," "a bee," and that the name of the hill was Bhramarâgiri, i e, the hill of the "Black bee" or of Durgâ I was gratified some months afterwards to find in Taou-Sun a complete confirmation of my opinion, as he in his account of this district speaks of the Black-bee Mountain, using the symbol "fung," "a bee," for "fung," "a peak"

[2] Thus in Fa-hian's account of the five-yearly religious assembly (Pañchavassa-parishad), the Chinese symbols are pan-cha-yue-sse (hwui), where yue evidently corresponds to va Again, throughout Taou-Sun's work on the history of the Sâkyas, the symbols for Chakkavat are cha ka-yue, where again yue is equivalent to vat And so again, when Taou-Sun describes the inhabitants of Vaisâli in the time of Buddha, he always calls them yue-chi, i e., Vajjis or Vaṭis (the symbol chi is used for ṭi, as in Ku chi for Koṭi).

Pârâvata, "a pigeon," there need be no difficulty. It may have been called the "Pigeon monastery" in pre-Brahmanical times. The highest storey was probably decorated with pigeon-emblems,[1] or, like the top beams of the gateways at Sanchi, adorned with the trisul emblem. This emblem, in all probability, originally denoted the three rays of the rising sun.[2] These three rays, by the addition of a simple stroke at the base, were converted into a representation of a descending pigeon or dove. This would be sufficient to account for the name the Pigeon monastery. But there is no need to press this matter, for whether the symbol yue be equal to va or vat, in this particular case, there can be no doubt as to its true restoration.

5 This remark leads me to allude briefly to the people named Yue-chi or Yue-ti in Chinese Buddhist literature. There is frequent mention made of the Yue-chi in Chinese books previous to the Turushka invasion of North-West India by the predecessors of Kanishka. The inhabitants of Vaisâlî are, e.g., in Buddha's lifetime, called Yue-chi.[3]

These people we know were Vajjis or Vatis;[4] they are represented as a proud and arrogant race, and remarkable for personal display and the equipment of their chariots.[5] I should argue then that as the Amardi are called Mardi, and the Aparni are called Parni, so the Vatis were the same as the Avatis. But in the Scythic portion of the Behistun inscription we have distinct mention of the Afaitis or Avartis as the people who inhabited the high lands bordering on Media and the south shores of the Caspian. Were the Vajjis or Vatis, then, a people allied to [1] I cannot suppose that he meant to say that the different storeys were constructed in the shape of the animals denoted, but that they were decorated by emblems of these animals.

[2] Cf. the figure of Mithra in Dr Bruce's Itinerarium Septentrionale, and also "Abstract of Four Lectures," p. 159.

[3] Viz., in many passages in the works of Sang yui and Taou Sün.

[4] The symbol chi is convertible with ti (as before noticed).

[5] I have called attention to the equipment, &c., of the Lichchavis in vol. xix., Sacred Books of the East, p. 257, n. 2.

these Medes or Scyths, who at an early date had invaded India? The question at any rate is worth consideration[1]

6. Arising from this is a still more interesting inquiry, although perhaps more speculative, touching the origin of the name "Licchavis," given to the inhabitants of Vaiśâlî Mr Hodgson speaks of these people as Scyths,[2] and if we remember that the Vajjians, otherwise Licchavis, were a foreign people, and throughout their history regarded as unbelievers, having chaityas consecrated to Yakshas, &c., it will not be unreasonable to derive their name from the Scythic race known as Kavis or Kabis, by whose aid Feridun was placed on the throne of Persia.[3] These Kavis or Kabis were unbelievers,[4] and their blacksmith's flag,[5] which was adopted by the Persians as their national banner, was finally taken and perhaps destroyed by the Arabs. Is the flag (Plate xxviii fig. 1, Tree and Serpent Worship) this flag of the Kavis? There is another scene in which a similar flag may be observed (surmounted, as the former, by a trisul), I mean in Plate xxxviii. If this Plate represents the siege of Kuśinagara by the Vajjis, to recover a portion of the relics of Buddha, then the procession on the left, in which the relic-casket is carried off in triumph, accompanied by the flag, is probably intended to represent the Vajjians proceeding to Vaiśâlî for the purpose of enshrining the relics, as already noticed and represented in Plate xxviii

7. But again, the followers of the Turushka invaders under Kanishka and his predecessors were deeply imbued with Zoroastrian conceptions, as is evident from their coins,[6] and these too were Yue-chi or Vatis They must have derived their Zoroastrian proclivities from residence

[1] In confirmation, I would again refer to the testimony of the sculptures at Sanchi; vide my short and uncorrected paper, J R A S, January 1882

[2] Collected Essays, Trübner's edition, p 17.

[3] Cf Sir H Rawlinson, J R A S., xv. p 258

[4] "Blind heretics," vide Zendavesta by Darmesteter and Mills, pass

[5] Derefsh-i-Kavani

[6] Vide paper by M Aurel Stein, Ind Antiq., April 1888.

among, or connection with, people professing this religion; and so again we argue that these Yue-chi or Kushans[1] were a Northern people from the borders of the Caspian. The entire argument appears to be confirmed by the fact that Hiuen-Tsiang[2] places a district called Vati in this very neighbourhood, where also dwelt the Mardi, a term equivalent to Afariti or Avati, as already shown by Norris

8 This leads me to observe, lastly, that the plates in "Tree and Serpent Worship," in which Nâgas and their female attendants are represented as worshipping the various thrones or seats on which was supposed to reside the spiritual presence of Buddha, do in fact denote the effect of the preaching of the Master on these emigrant Medes or Afaritis The Medes, as is well known, were called Mars, i.e, Snakes, and in the Vendîdad, Ajis Dahâka, "the biting snake," is the personification of Media When, therefore, Buddha converted the people of Vaiśâli and the Mallas of Kuśinagara (who were Kushans),[3] the success of his teaching was denoted in these sculptures by representing the Nâgas (remarkable for their beauty, as were the Medes) in the act of paying worship before him, as he was supposed to be spiritually present on the seats or thrones in places he had occupied during his career in the world

It will be sufficient for my purpose if these remarks lead to a consideration of the point as to the probability of an early migration (or, perhaps, deportation) of a northern people allied to the Medes into India, who made Vaiśâlî their capital.

9. There is an interesting point to be noticed respecting the council of Patna under Aśôka. On page 102 of

[1] The Kushans are constantly mentioned by Ferdusi as the aboriginal race of Media. J. R. A. S., xv p 205, vide p 46, infra, n 5

[2] Records, vol i p 35

[3] It is curious that the Mallas are called in Chinese Leh-sse, i.e, Strong-lords But does the symbol lih correspond with the Accadian lik or lig, a lion? In this case we should gather that the Lićchavis were lik+Kavis, i.e, powerful, or lion, Kavis.

the translation following, it will be observed that Aśôka is said to have convened 1000 priests in the Kukkutârama, i.e., the "Garden of the cock" By comparing this passage with Dipavamsa, vii 57, 58, 59, it will be plain that this convent is the same as the Asokârama, and that the allusion in my text is to the third council at Patna. But it appears from the corresponding account in the Si-yu-ki[1] that the members of this council were all Sthaviras or Theras, and therefore that it did not include any members of the other schools We may hence understand why this council takes such a leading place in the records of the Ceylonese Buddhist Church, but is almost entirely ignored in the Northern books

II. I come now to notice very briefly the records left us by I-tsing respecting other pilgrims after Hiuen-Tsiang, who, leaving China or neighbouring places, visited sacred spots in India consecrated by association with Buddha's presence or connected with his history

1 It will be remembered that Hiuen-Tsiang returned to China after his sojourn in India in the year 645 A D, and that he died in the year 664 A D It was just after this event, viz, in the year 671 or 672, that I-tsing, then a mere stripling, resolved, with thirty-seven other disciples of Buddha, to visit the Western world to pay reverence to the sacred vestiges of their religion Taking ship at Canton, he found himself deserted by his companions, and so proceeded alone by what is known as the southern sea-route to India. This route, as we shall notice hereafter, was by way of Condore[2] to Śribhoja (Palembang, in

[1] Records, &c, vol ii p 96 *

[2] It is curious to find that the inhabitants of the Condore Islands at this time were of the Negro type, with thick woolly hair, and that their language was used in all the neighbouring districts I-tsing speaks of himself as interpreting this language at Śribhoja. We learn too from other sources that these Condore negroes were largely used as servants or slaves at Canton and Southern China about this time.

* The expression chief-priests, on the page referred to, is equal to Sthaviras.

Sumatra), and thence to Quedāh; then to Nagapatam and Ceylon, or by way of Arakan and the coast of Burmah to Tamralipti (Tatta), where stood a famous temple called Varâha (the wild boar), in which most of the pilgrims stopped awhile to study Sanskrit It was in this temple that I-tsing translated the "friendly letter" which Nâgârjuna had composed and sent to his patron King Sadvaha. He dwelt here for three years.

After visiting more than thirty countries, I-tsing returned to Śribhoja, from which place, having accidentally missed his passage in a homeward-bound ship, he sent one of his treatises, viz, his "History of the Southern Sea Religious (Law) Practices," in four chapters, to China (the inner land), and himself remained for some time longer at Śribhoja Finally, he returned to Honan towards the close of the seventh century A D (viz, 693–694 A D.), bringing with him nearly 400 distinct volumes of original copies of the Sûtras and the Vinaya and Abhidharma Scriptures He translated during the years 700–703 A D twenty volumes, and afterwards in 705 A D four other works. Altogether, between the years 700–712 A D he translated (with others) fifty-six distinct works in 250 chapters Of these, the Kau-fă-kao-sang-chuen (in two parts) is an account of fifty-six priests or Buddhist converts who visited India and the neighbourhood from China and bordering districts during the latter half of the seventh century A D. A part of these pilgrims proceeded by the southern sea-route, and a part across the deserts and mountains by the northern route to India With respect to the former, I will call attention to the incident recorded on p 188 of the present work, from which we gather that this route was known and used at any rate as early as Hiuen-Tsiang's time And it would appear that Bhâśkaravarman, the king of Kâmarûpa, and probably former kings of that kingdom, had this sea-route to China under their special protection. In fact, so early as the time of Fa-hian it appears to have been well established, as he returned from Ceylon to China by sea We learn from I-tsing's account that in his time there was a flourishing mercantile and religious establishment on the coast of Sumatra, probably on the site of the present Palembang (as before suggested), where the merchants were accustomed to find shelter and ship their spices for Canton I have alluded to this point in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, October 1881, and also in Trubner's Record; there is no need therefore to repeat the arguments in this place But I will place down here a brief resumé of I-tsing's notices concerning some of these pilgrims, in the order of his book, referred to above.

KAU-FA-KAO-SANG-CHUEN.

(Nanj Cat 1491)

III. The author in the preface having alluded to the journeys of Fa-hian and Hiuen-Tsiang, who proceeded to the western countries to procure books and pay reverence to the sacred relics, passes on to notice the hardships and dangers of the route, and the difficulty of finding shelter or entertainment in the different countries visited by their successors, pilgrims to the same spots, and that in consequence of there being no temples (monasteries) set apart for Chinese priests He then goes on to enumerate the names of the pilgrims referred to in his memoirs.

1. The Shaman Hiuen-Chiu, master of the law, a native of Sin-chang, in Ta-chau His Indian name was Prakâsamati At a very early age he became a disciple of Buddha, and when arrived at manhood, he purposed in his mind to set out to worship the sacred traces of his religion Accordingly, in the course of the Chêng-Kwan period (627–650 A D), taking up his residence in the capital, he first applied himself to the acquisition of the Sanskrit (Fan) language. Then, staff in hand, travelling westward, he got beyond Kin-fu, and passing across the desert of drifting sands, he arrived by way of the Iron Gates,[1] over the Snowy Peak, through Tukhâra and Tibet into North India, and finally reached the Jâlandhar country, having narrowly escaped death at the hands of robbers. He remained in Jâlandhar four years The king of the Mung[2] country caused him to be detained, and gave him all necessary entertainment Having gained proficiency in Sanskrit literature, after a little delay, he gradually went southward and reached the Mahabôdhi (convent) There he remained four years After this he went on to Nâlanda, where he remained three years After this he followed the Ganges' northern course, and received the religious offerings of the king of the country He remained here in the Sin-che and other temples, then, after three years, he returned to Loyang by way of Nepal and Tibet, after a journey of some 10,000 li

Hiuen-Chiu after this, in the year 664 A D, returned to Kaśmir, where he found an aged Brahman called Lokayata, with whom he returned to Loyang And now being pressed to set out again, he passed by way of the piled-up rocks (asmakûta) along the steep and craggy road that leads across rope-bridges into Tibet Having escaped with his life from a band of robbers, he arrived at the borders of North India Here he met with the Chinese envoy,[3] who accompanied him and Lokayata to the Marâthâ country in Western India. Here he met the Mung king, and, in obedience to his instruction, remained there for four years Proceeding to South India, he purposed to return to Tangut, taking with him various sorts of medicines He reached the Vajrasâna, and passed on to Nâlanda, where I-tsing met him And now, having fulfilled the purpose of his life, he found the way through Nepal blocked by Tibetan hordes, and the road

[1] Vide Buddhist Records, &c , p. 36, n 119

[2] There is much mention of the Mung king in I-tsing, is he the same as the Balá-mi who seems to have succeeded the last Śilâditya? Vide Records, p 176 n , and p 242

[3] This is probably the envoy who was sent from China, and arrived in India after the death of Śilâditya.

through Kapiśa in the hands of the Arabs. Then he returned to the Grihdṛakûta peak and the Bamboo garden, but could find no solution of his doubts, so retiring to the Amrâvat country in Mid-India, he died there, aged sixty odd years[1]

2. Taou-hi, a doctor of the law, of the district of Lih-Shing, the department Tsa'i-chau. He was called by the Sanskrit name Śrideva He went by the northern route through Tibet towards India, visited the Mahâbôdhi, and paid respect to the sacred traces, and during some years dwelt in the Nâlanda monastery and in the Kuśi country The Mung king of Amrâvat paid him great respect. Whilst in the Nâlanda monastery he studied books of the Great Vehicle, whilst in the Chu-po-pun-na (Dâvavâna) temple (the temple of the cremation) he studied the Vinaya pitaka, and practised himself in the Śabdavidyâ, a synopsis of which he drew up in the square and grass characters. Whilst in the Mahâbodhi temple he engraved one tablet in Chinese, giving an account of things new and old in China. He also wrote (copied ?) some four hundred chapters of sûtras and śâstras whilst at Nâlanda. I-tsing, although in the west, did not see him, but whilst dwelling in the Amrâvat country, he sickened and died, aged fifty years

3 Sse-pin, a doctor of the law, a man of Ts'ai-chau, well versed in the Sanskrit forms of magic incantation. He accompanied Hiuen-chiu from North India to Western India. Arrived at Amarakova (?), he dwelt in the Royal Temple, where he met with Taou-Hi; they remained here for one year together, when Sse-pin sickened and died, aged thirty-five years.

4. Aryavarman, a man of Sin-lo (Corea), left Chang'an A D 638. He set out with a view to recover the true teaching and to adore the sacred relics. He dwelt in the

[1] With respect to the other priests named by I-tsing, we can only here give an abstract of his notices. For the Amâravati country vide Records, ii 209, n 70.

Nâlanda Temple, copying out many Sûtras. He had left the eastern borders of Corea, and now bathed in the Dragon pool of Nâlanda. Here he died, aged seventy odd years.

5 Hwui-nieh, a Corean, set out for India 638 A D, arrived at the Nâlanda Temple, and there studied the sacred books and reverenced the holy traces. I-tsing found some writing he had left in the temple, where also he had left his Sanskrit MSS The priests said he died the same year, about sixty years of age.

6 Hiuen-Ta'i, a doctor of the law, a Corean, called by the Sanskrit name of Sarvajñanadeva In the year Yung-hwei (650 A D) he went by the Tibetan road through Nepal to Mid-India, he there worshipped the relics at the Bôdhi Tree Afterwards going to the Tukhâra country, he met Taou-hi, with whom he returned to the Ta-hsio Temple (Mahâbôdhi). Afterwards he returned to China, and was not heard of again.

7 Hiuen-hau, a doctor of the law, a Corean, went with Hiuen-chiu, in the middle of the Chêng-kwan period, to India, and reaching the Ta-hsio Temple, he died there

8. Two priests of Corea, names unknown, started from Chang'an by the southern sea-route and came to Śribhoja They died in the country of Po-lu-sse, to the westward (the western portion of Sumatra)

9 Buddhadharma, a man of To-ho-shi-li (Tushara or Turkhâra), of great size and strength. He became a priest, and being of a gentle disposition, he wandered through the nine provinces of China, and was everywhere received. Afterwards he went to the west to worship the sacred traces I-tsing saw him at Nâlanda; afterwards he went to the north when about fifty years old.

10 Taou-fang, a doctor of the law, of Ping-chau, went by way of the Sandy Desert and the Tsih rock to Nepal, and afterwards came to the Ta-hsio Temple, where he remained several years, he then returned to Nepal, where he still is in Sanskrit Chandradeva, in the last year of the Chêng-kwan period (649 A.D.) went by the Tu-fan (Tibetan) road to Mid-India, he arrived at the Bôdhi Temple, where he worshipped the chaityas, afterwards he went to Nâlanda After that, going twelve stages to the eastward, he came to the King's Temple, where they study only the Little Vehicle. He remained here many years, learning the books of the Tripitaka according to the Hinayâna. Returning to China through Nepal, he died.

11 Taou-sing, a doctor of the law, of Ping-chau, called

12 Shang-tih, a contemplative priest, of Ping-chau He longed for the joys of the Western Paradise, and, with the view of being born there, he devoted himself to a life of purity and religion (reciting the name of Buddha) He vowed to write out the whole of the Prajña-Sûtra, occupying 10,000 chapters Desiring to worship the sacred vestiges, and so by this to secure for himself the greater merit, with a view to a birth in that heaven, he travelled through the nine provinces (of China), desiring wherever he went to labour in the conversion of men and to write the sacred books. Coming to the coast, he embarked in a ship for Kalinga.[1] Thence he proceeded by sea to the Malaya country, and thence wishing to go to Mid-India, he embarked in a merchant-ship for that purpose. Being taken in a storm, the ship began to founder, and the sailors and merchants were all struggling with one another to get aboard a little boat that was near. The captain of the ship being a believer, and anxious to save the priest, called out to him with a loud voice to come aboard the boat, but Shang-tih replied, "I will not come, save the other people." And so he remained silently absorbed, as if a brief term of life were agreeable to one possessed of the heart of Bôdhi. Having refused all help, he clasped his hands in adoration, and looking towards the west, he repeated the sacred name of Amita, and when the ship went down these were his last words. He was about fifty years of age He had a follower unknown to me, who also perished with his master, also calling on the name of Amita Buddha.

[1] The coast of Annam.

13. Matisimha, a man of the capital, his common name being Wong-po This man accompanied the priest Sse-pin, and arriving at the Middle Land, dwelt in the Sin-ché Temple Finding his progress little in the Sanskrit language, he returned homewards by way of Nepal, and died on the way there, æt 40

14 Yuan-hwui, a doctor of the law, according to report offspring of the commander-in-chief Ngan Leaving North India, he dwelt in Kaśmir, and took charge of the royal elephants The king of this country delighted day by day in going to the different temples, the Dragon-Lake Mountain Temple, the Kung Yang Temple This is where the 500 Rahats received charity Here also the venerable Madyantika, the disciple of Ananda, converted the Dragon King. Having remained here some years, he went southwards and came to the great Bôdhi Temple, where he worshipped the Bôdhi Tree, beheld the Lake of "Mu-chin" (Muchhalinda), ascended the Vulture Peak, &c After this he went back to Nepal and died there

15. Again, there was a man who accompanied the envoy by the northern route to the Baktra country, and lodged in the Nâva-vihâra in Balkh In this establishment the principles of the Little Vehicle were taught Having become a priest, he took the name of Chittavarma Having received the precepts, he declined to eat the three pure things, on which the master of the convent said, "Tathâgata, our Great Master, permitted five things (as food), why do you object to them?" He answered, "All the books of the Great Vehicle forbid them, this is what I formerly practised, I cannot now bring myself to change." The superior answered, "I have established a practice here in agreement with the three sacred collections, and you follow your own interpretation, which is contrary to mine. I cannot permit this difference of opinion, I cease to be your master." Chittavarma was thus reluctantly obliged to yield Then having learned a little Sanskrit, he returned by the northern route I know no more about him.

16 Again, there were two men who lived in Nepal, they were the children of the wet-nurse of the Duke-Prince of Tibet (Tufan). They both were ordained, but one went back to lay life They lived in the Temple of the Heavenly Kings They spoke Sanskrit well and understood Sanskrit books

17 Lung, a doctor of the law, I know not whence he came In the Chêng Kwan period (627–650 A D) he went by the northern route to North India, wishing to visit the sacred spots In Mid-India he got a Sanskrit copy of the Fă-hwa (Lotus of the Good Law), and having gone to Gandhâra, he died there

18. Ming-Yuen, a man of Yih-chau, a doctor of the law, whose Sanskrit name was Chinta-deva He embarked in a ship of Cochin-China, and came to the Kaliṅga country, and thence to Ceylon

19 I-long, a priest of Yih-chau, well versed in the Vinaya Pitaka, and in the interpretation of the Yoga, set forth from Chang'an with a priest, Chi-ngan, of his own province, and an eminent man called I-hiuen, and after travelling through the southern provinces came to Niau-Lui, and there embarked on board a merchant-ship Having arrived at Langkia (Kamalanka?), Chi-ngan died I-long, with his other companion, went on to Ceylon, where they worshipped the Tooth, and having obtained various books, returned through Western India It is not known where he is now residing. He has not been heard of in Mid-India.

20. I-tsing next refers to a priest of Yih-chau named Huining. He left China by sea for the south in the year 665 A D., and passed three years in the country called Ho-ling.[1]

[1] Kaliṅga

21 The next notice is of the life of a priest called Wan-ki of Kiau-chau, who spent ten years in the Southern Sea, and was very learned in the language of Kun-lun (Condore), and partly acquainted with Sanskrit. He afterwards retired to a lay life and resided at Shi-lo-fo-shi (Sribhôja)

22 Another priest called Mocha-Deva, a Cochin-Chinese, went to India by the southern sea-route, and having visited all the countries of that part, arrived at the Mahâbodhi Temple, where he adored the sacred relics, and died æt 24

23 Kwei-chung (the disciple of Ming-yuen, No 18), another priest of Cochin-China, went by the Southern Sea with his master, Ming-yuen, to Ceylon, afterwards in company with him proceeded to the Bôdhi Tree, and afterwards to Râjagriha, and being taken sick in the Bamboo garden (Veluvana), he died there, aged thirty years.

24. Hwui Yen, a doctor of the law, of Kwai-chau, was a pupil of Hing-Kung, he went to Simhala, and remained there Whether he is dead or alive I know not

25 Sin-chiu, a doctor of the law, his country not known. His Sanskrit name Charita-varma Taking the northern route, he arrived in the Western country, and after the customary reverence, he lived in the Sin-ché Temple In an upper room of this temple he constructed a sick chamber, and left it for ever for the use of sick brothers. He himself died here Some days before his death, in the middle of the night, he suddenly exclaimed, "There is Bôdhisattva, with outstretched hand, beckoning me to his lovely abode," and then, closing his hands, with a long sigh he expired, æt. thirty-five 26 Chi Hing, a doctor of the law, of Ngai-Chau, his Sanskrit name Prajña-Deva, went to the Western region, and afterwards dwelt in the Sin-che Temple, north of the river Ganges, and died there, aged about fifty years.

27. We next read of a priest of the Mahâyana school called Tang, or "the lamp" (dîpa), who went with his parents when young to the land of Dvâravatî (Sandoway in Burmah), and there became a priest. He returned with the Chinese envoy to the capital Afterwards he went by the southern sea-route to Ceylon, where he worshipped the Tooth, and then proceeding through South India and crossing into Eastern India, arriving at Tamralipti being attacked by robbers at the mouth of the river, he barely escaped with his life, he resided at Tamralipti for twelve years, having perfected himself in Sanskrit, he then proceeded to Nâlanda and Buddha Gayâ, then to Vaiśâlî and the Kuśi country, and finally died at Kuśinagara, in the Pari-Nirvâna Temple.

28 Sañghavarma, a man of Samarkand, when young crossed the Sandy Desert and came to China Afterwards, in company with the envoy, he came to the Great Bôdhi Temple and the Vajrâsana, where he burnt lamps in worship for seven days and seven nights continuously Moreover, in the Bôdhi Hall, under the Tree of Aśoka, he carved a figure of Buddha and of Kwan-tseu-tsai Bodhisattva He then returned to China Afterwards, being sent to Kwai-chau (Cochin-China), there was great scarcity of food there. He daily distributed food, and was so affected by the sorrows of the fatherless and bereaved orphans, that he was moved to tears as he visited them. He was on this account named the weeping Bodhisattva. He died shortly afterwards from infection caught there, which soon terminated fatally, æt. about sixty.

29. Two priests of Kao-chang went to Mid-India, and died on the voyage. Their Chinese books are at Śribhoja.

30 Wan-yun, a doctor of the law, of Loyang, travelling through the southern parts of China, came to Cochin-China, thence went by ship to Kaliñga, where he died.

31 I-hwui, a man of Loyang, of eminent ability, set out for India to recover some copies of Sanskrit (Fan) books. He died æt 30.

32. Three priests set out by the northern route for Udyâna, and also for the place of Buddha's skull-bone They are said to have died there.

33. Hwui Lun, a Corean, otherwise called Prajñavarma, came by sea from his own country to Fuchau, and proceeded thence to Chang'an. Following after the priest Huen-chiu (No 1, p xiii.), he reached the West, and during ten years dwelt in the Amrâvat country and in the Sin-ché Temple (north of the Ganges) Passing through the eastern frontiers, and thence proceeding northward, he came to the Tu-ho-lo (Tukhâra) Temple This temple was originally built by the Tukhâra people for their own priests The establishment is called Gandhârasanda To the west is the Kapiśa Temple The priests of this establishment study the Little Vehicle Priests from the north also dwell here The temple is called Gunachanta

Two stages to the east of the Mahâbhôdi[1] is a temple called Kiu-lu-kia[2] It was built long ago by a king of the Kiu-lu-ka country, a southern kingdom (Kurukshetra?) Although poor, this establishment is strict in its teaching. Recently, a king called Sun-Army (Adityasena), built by the side of the old temple another, which is now newly finished. Priests from the south occupy this temple

About forty stages east of this, following the course of the Ganges, is the Deer Temple, and not far from this is a ruined establishment, with only its foundations remaining, called the Tchina (or China) Temple Tradition says that formerly a Mahârâja called Śrigupta built this temple for the use of Chinese priests He was prompted to do so by the arrival of about twenty priests of that country who had travelled from Sz'chuen to the Mahâbhôdi Temple to pay their worship. Being impressed by their pious de-

[1] It is doubtful whether the Mahâbhôdi named here does not refer to the Tu-ho lo Temple mentioned above.

[2] This may be restored to Kuruka, and may possibly refer to the Kuru country meanour, he gave them the land and the revenues of about twenty villages as an endowment. This occurred some 500 years ago The land has now reverted to the king of Eastern India, whose name is Devavarma, but he is said to be willing to give back the temple-land and the endowment in case any priests come from China. The Mahâbhôdi Temple, near the Diamond Throne (i e, at Gayâ), was built by a king of Ceylon for the use of priests of that country. The Nâlanda Temple, which is seven stages north-east of the Mahâbhôdi, was built by an old king, Śri-Śakrâditya, for a Bhikshu of North India called Râja-Bhâja After beginning it he was much obstructed, but his descendants finished it, and made it the most magnificent establishment in Jambudvîpa. This building of Nâlanda stands four-square, like a city precinct The gates (porches) have overlapping eaves covered by tiles. The buildings (gates ?) are of three storeys, each storey about twelve feet in height.

Outside the western gate of the great hall of the temple is a large stûpa and various châityas, each erected over different sacred vestiges, and adorned with every kind of precious substance.

The superior is a very old man; the Karmadâna or Vihâraswâmi or Vihârapâla is the chief officer after the superior, and to him the utmost deference is paid

This is the only temple in which, by imperial order, a water-clock is kept to determine the right time. The night is divided into three watches, during the first and last of which there are religious services; in the middle watch, as the priests may desire, they can watch or repose The method in which this clock determines the time is fully described in the "Ki-kwei-ch'uen."

The temple is called Śri Nâlanda Vihâra, after the name of the Nâga called Nanda

The great temple opens to the west. Going about twenty paces from the gate, there is a stûpa about 100 feet high.

This is where the Lord of the World (Lokanâtha) kept Wass (the season of the rains) for three months, the Sanskrit name is Mûlagandhakoti Northwards fifty paces is a great stûpa, even higher than the other; this was built by Balâditya—very much reverenced—in it is a figure of Buddha turning the wheel of the law South west is a little châitya about ten feet high This commemorates the place where the Brahman, with the bird in his hand, asked questions; the Chinese expression Su-li fau-to means just the same as this

To the west of the Mûlagandha Hall is the tooth-brush tree of Buddha.

On a raised space is the ground where Buddha walked. It is about two cubits wide, fourteen or fifteen long, and two high. There are lotus flowers carved out of the stone, a foot high, fourteen or fifteen in number, to denote his steps

Going from the temple south to Râjagriha is thirty li The Vulture Peak and the Bambu Garden are close to this city. Going S W to the Mahâbôdhi is seven stages (yojanas). To Vaisâli is twenty-five stages north. To the Deer Park twenty or so stages west East to Tamralipti is sixty or seventy stages This is the place for embarking for China from Eastern India and close to the sea. There are about 3500 priests in the temple at Nâlanda, which is supported by revenues derived from land (villages) given by a succession of kings to the monastery.

34. Taou-lin, a priest of King-chau (in Hupeh), whose Sanskrit name was Silaprabha, embarked in a foreign ship, and passing the copper-pillars, stretched away to Lanka (Kamalanká), after passing along the Kalinga coast he came to the country of the naked men. He then proceeded to Tamralipti, where he passed three years learning the Sanskrit language After visiting the Vajrâsana and worshipping the Bôdhi Tree, he passed to Nâlanda, where he studied the Kosha, and after a year or two went to the Vulture Peak, near Râjagriha, and finally proceeded to South India.

35 Tan-Kuong, a priest of the same district in China, went to India by the southern sea-route, and having arrived at A-li-ki-lo (Arakan ?), he was reported to have found much favour with the king of that country, and to have got a temple built and books and images, in the end, as was supposed, he died there.

36. Huui-ming, another priest from the same district, set out to go to India by the southern sea-route, but the ship being baffled by contrary winds, put in at Tung-chu (copper pillars), erected by Ma-yuen, and after stopping at Shang-king, returned to China.

37 Hiuen-ta, a priest of Kung-chow and the district of Kiang Ning, was a man of high family. He appears to have accompanied an envoy in a Persian ship to the southern seas. Having arrived at Fo-shai (Srîbhôja), he remained there six months studying the Sabdavidyâ, the king was highly courteous, and on the occasion of his sending a present to the country of Mo-lo-yu (Malaya), Hiuen-ta proceeded there, and remained two months He then went on to Quĕdàh, and then at the end of winter went in the royal ship towards Eastern India. Going north from Quĕdàh, after ten days or so they came to the country of the naked men For two or three lis along the eastern shore there were nothing but cocoa-nut trees and forests of betel-vines. The people, when they saw the ship, came alongside in little boats with the greatest clamour, there were upwards of one hundred such boats filled with cocoa-nuts and plantains; they had also baskets, &c., made of rattan; they desired to exchange these things for whatever we had that they fancied, but they liked nothing so much as bits of iron. A piece of this metal two fingers' length in size would buy as many as five or ten cocoa-nuts. The men here are all naked, the women wear a girdle of leaves, the sailors in joke offered them clothes, but they made signs that they did not want any such articles. This country, according to report, is south-west of Sz'-ch'uan. The country produces no iron and very little gold and silver, the people live on cocoa-nuts and some esculent roots, but have very little rice or cereals. Iron is very valuable; they call it Lu-a The men are not quite black, of middling height, they use poisoned arrows, one of which is fatal. Going for half a month in a north-west direction, we come to Tamralipti, which is the southern district of East India. This place is some sixty stages or more from Nâlanda and the Bôdhi Tree Meeting the priest called "Lamp of the Great Vehicle" (Mahâyana dipa) in this place, they remained together there one year, learning Sanskrit and practising themselves in the Śabda-śâstra They then went on with some hundred or so merchantmen towards Central India When about ten days' journey from the Mahâbôdhi, in a narrow pass, the road being bad and slippery, Hiuen-ta was left behind and attacked by robbers, who stripped him and left him half dead At sundown some villagers rescued him and gave him a garment Going on north, he came to Nâlanda, and after visiting all the sacred spots in the neighbourhood, he remained at Nâlanda ten years, and then going back to Tamralipti, he returned to Quĕdàh, and with all his books and translations, amounting in all to 500,000 ślokas, enough to fill a thousand volumes, he remained at Śribhôja 38 Shen-hing, a priest of Sin-Chow, also went to Śribhoja, where he died.

39 The priest Ling-uan, having gone through Annam, came to India, and erected under the Bôdhi Tree a figure of Mâitreya Bodhisattva one cubit in height, and of exquisite character.

40 Seng-chi, a priest and companion of the former, went to India by the southern sea-route, and arrived at Samatata The king of that country, named Râjabhata

(or patu), a Upâsaka, greatly reverenced the three objects of worship, and devoted himself to his religious duties

41 A priest, Chi-sz, is mentioned, who went to the south and resided at Shang king, near Cochin-China. He then went south to Śribhôja, and afterwards proceeded to India.

42. A priest, Wou Hing (Prajñadeva), in company with the last, left Hainan with an easterly wind, after a month he arrived at Śribhôja He then went in the royal ship for fifteen days to Malaya, in another fifteen days to Quĕdàh, then waiting till the end of winter, going west for thirty days he arrived at Naga-vadana (Nagapatam ?), whence after two days' sea-voyage he came to Simhapura (Ceylon) He there worshipped the sacred tooth, and then going N E for a month, arrived at the country of O-li-ki-lo. This is the eastern limit of East India. It is a part of Jambudvîpa After this he proceeded to the Mahâbôdhi Temple. Having rested here, he returned to Nâlanda and studied the Yoga, Kosha, and other works Moved with a desire to find copies of the Vinaya, he repaired to the Tiladaka Temple In the end he died at Nâlanda.

43 Fa shin also started by the southern route, and after passing Shang-king (Saigon), Ku-long, Kaling, and Quĕdàh, he died.

Putting together these notices, we may conclude that the sea-route between China and India in the early years of the Tang dynasty was by way of Java, Sumatra, the Straits of Malacca, the coast of Burma and Arakan, to Tamralipti, or else by the more adventurous way of Ceylon from Quĕdàh It seems that the Condore Islands were a centre of trade, and that the language of the natives of these islands was used generally through the Southern Seas; at least I-tsing speaks of himself as interpreting the language at Śribhôja (vide p xv n)

We have one or two points of some certainty in the itinerary of these pilgrims For instance, in the Si-yu-ki, Hiuen-Tsiang (Records, ii 200) says that to the N.E of Samotata is the country called Śrikshetra, to the S.E. of this is Kamalangka, to the east of this is Dârapati (read Dvârapati) This country has been identified by Captain St John (Phœnix, May 1872) with old Tung-oo and Sandoway in Burma, lat 18° 20′ N long 94° 20′ E , it is, in fact the "door land" between Burma and Siam , this latter being called Champa or Lin-I Hiuen-Tsiang remarks that to the S W of Lin-I, or Siam, is the country of the Yavanas, or, as they are called in his text, the Yen-mo-na We do not read of this country in I-tsing, it may perhaps represent Cambodia.

IV Another work of some importance written by I-tsing is the following —

NAN-HAE-KI-KWEI-NIU-FA-CH'UEN.

(Nanj Cat 1492.)

This work, in four chapters, was compiled by I-tsing, and forwarded to China "by one returning to the inner land," to be arranged and published It relates to matters connected with the religious customs of India and some other districts (Southern Sea islands) visited by I-tsing, or gathered from others who had visited these places, during the time of his absence on foreign travel.

Passing by the introduction, which refers to the origin of the world and its orderly arrangement, I-tsing (or his editor) next alludes to the number of the Buddhist schools (Nikâyas), and the various countries in which they flourished The chief schools of independent origin—but depending on distinct tradition—he names, are these :—

1. The Âryamahâsanghiti, divided into seven branches.
2. The Âryasthaviras, divided into three branches, the Tripitaka more or less like the former

3 Âryamûlasarvâstavâdins, divided into four branches, the Tripitaka more or less like the former

4 The Âryasammatiyas, divided into four branches. The Tripitaka differs in its number of stanzas from the former, and the school has other divergences

These schools, with their sub-branches, compose the eighteen sects into which Buddhism was divided at an early date (the century following the Nirvâna).

In the country of Magadha, he observes, each of the four schools is in a flourishing condition In the Maiâtha country and in Sindh the Sammatîya school is chiefly followed In the north the Sarvâstavâdins and Mahâsanghikas are met with, in the southern borders the Mahâsthaviras are principally found The others are little known. On the eastern outskirting countries the four schools are intermingled [From Nâlanda, five hundred stages east, is the frontier land referred to For these countries vide Records, II. 200]

In Ceylon the Sthavira school alone flourishes, the Mahâsañghikas are expelled

With respect to the ten countries known as the Southern Sea islands,[1] the Mûlasarvâstavâdins and the Sammatîyas are principally found, the other two schools at the present time are seldom met with The teaching of the Little Vehicle is principally affected, in Mo-lo-yau, however, the Great Vehicle is studied also. Some of these islands may be perhaps 100 li in circuit, others several hundred li, and some 100 stages round. It is difficult to calculate distances on the great ocean, but the best skilled merchantmen know that they first arrive at Kiu-lun (called by the Cochin-China ambassadors Kwan-lun)[2]

[1] Reckoning from the west, the names of the islands are, Po-lu sse, Mo-lo-yau (the same as Shi-li-fo-yau), Mo-ho-siu, Ho-ling, Tan Tan, Pw'an-pw'an, Po-li, Kiu-lun, Fo-shi po-lo, Ho-shen Mo kia-man, and other little islands not catalogued.

[2] The people of this country alone have woolly hair and black skins With this exception, the people of all the other countries are like those of China.—Ch. Ed.

In Châmpa (otherwise called Lin-I), the Sammatîya school is chiefly found, with a few Sarvâstavâdins. A month's voyage south-west is Annam Formerly the people sacrificed to Heaven, but afterwards the law of Buddha flourished, now a wicked king has destroyed the priests, and all the heretics live mixed together. This is the southern point of Jambudvîpa

Speaking generally, the Great Vehicle prevails in the north, the teaching of the Little Vehicle in the south In some parts of China the Great Vehicle is in favour, but with these exceptions the Great and Little Vehicle are intermingled without distinction In both cases the rules of moral conduct and the four truths are taught, but in the Great Vehicle they worship the Bodhisattvas, but not in the teaching of the Little Vehicle.

With respect to the Great Vehicle, there are only two branches, viz, (1) the Chung-kwan (Mâdyamîkas?), (2) the Yôga system. The Mâdyamîkas regard all outward phenomena as empty and substantially unreal The Yôgas regard outward things as nothing, inward things as everything Things are just what they appear to cognition. And so with respect to the sacred doctrine, it is true to one and false to another, there is no positive certainty for all The great aim is to reach that shore,[1] and to stem the tide of life.

After some further remarks, I-tsing proceeds to say that his records are framed on the teaching of the Mûlasarvâstavâdin school, divided into three branches:—1. The Dharmagûptas, 2 the Mahîsâsakas; 3 the Kâsyapîyas.

In Udyâna, Karashar, and Khotan there is a mixture of doctrine

We will now pass on to give the headings of the chapters in the work under notice:—

---

[1] That shore, i e, the other side of the stream of transmigration.

THE NAMES OF THE FORTY CHAPTERS OF THE NAN-HAE-KI-KWEI-NIU.

1. The evil of disregarding the observation of the season of rest (Vass)

2. Right decorum in the presence of the honoured one (images or paintings of the honoured one or ones).

3 The diminutive seats to be used whilst eating or reposing.

4. On the necessary cleansing of food vessels and personal preparation.

5 On cleansing after meals.

6 On the two sorts of water-pitchers.

7 On the early inspection with regard to insects.

8 On the early tooth-cleansing wood (brush)

9 Rules on undertaking religious fasts

10 On special requirements as to raiment and food.

11 As to the different kinds of vestments.

12 On special rules as to female clothing.

13 Rules as to sacred (pure) enclosures

14 The resting-time of the community (the five grades)

15 The period called Piavârana (relaxation after Vass)

16 On the mode of eating food (with chop-sticks)

17 On proper rules as to the seasons or hours of religious worship.

18 On articles of private property.

19 Rules and regulations for ordination.

20 The proper occasions for ablutions.

21 On seats used, and personal accommodation whilst seated

22. On rules concerning apartments for sleeping and resting.

23 On the advantage of proper exercise to health.

24 Worship not mutually dependent

25. On the way of personal behaviour to a teacher.

26 On the way of conduct towards strangers (priests)

27. On symptoms of bodily illness.

28 On medical rules.

29 On exceptional medical treatment (for offensive ailments).

30 On turning to the right in worship

31 On rules of decorum in cleansing the sacred objects of worship.

32 On chanting in worship.

33 On reverence to sacred objects.

34. On rules for learning in the West.

35 On the propriety of long hair

36 On disposing of the property of a deceased monk

37 On property allowed to the fraternity

38 On cremation

39. On charges brought by low or depraved men.

40 The unselfish character of the old worthies.

So far the headings of the chapters of this most important but obscure work It is to be hoped that the promised translation by a Japanese scholar may soon appear, the contents of the various chapters, as I have summarised them for my own reference, show me that the book, when clearly translated, will shed an unexpected light on many dark passages of Indian history.

The entire number of books translated by I-Tsing, as we have before remarked, amounted to fifty-six. I need allude to none of these on the present occasion, except to say that their names may be found in Mr Nanjio's Catalogue of the Buddhist Tripitaka (Appendix II, p 441) With respect, however, to the small tract numbered 1441 in the Catalogue, I may add that I am now printing the original text, which I hope to publish shortly with an English translation and notes.

In commending the present rather laborious work to the notice of the public, I must regret its many defects, and at the same time apologise both to the Publishers and my Readers for the long delay in completing the task I undertook. Responsibilities which have increased with increasing years, and flagging energies, the result of long sickness, must be my excuse

But I may not conclude without sincerely thanking those who have supported me in my labours, and especially his Lordship the Secretary of State for India and his Grace the Duke of Northumberland, from both of whom I have received material assistance.

GREENS NORTON RECTORY

HISTORY

OF THE

EARLY LIFE OF HIUEN-TSIANG

AND OF

HIS TRAVELS IN THE WESTERN WORLD.

BOOK I.

Begins with the birth (of Hiuen-Tsiang) in Kow-shi, and ends with the account of his arrival at Kau-Chang

THE infant name of the Master of the Law [1] was Hiuen-Tsiang, his ordinary family name was Chin he was a native of Chin-Liu He descended from Chang-Kong, who during the Han dynasty was lord of Tai-K'iu. His great-grandfather, whose name was Kin, was prefect of Shang-Tang, under the after-Wei dynasty His grandfather Kong, by his distinguished scholarship, obtained employment in the public service During the Ts'i dynasty he was appointed president of the Imperial College,[2] having, as endowment, the revenues of the town of Chow-nan: he thus founded the fortunes of his descendants he also was born in the district of Kow-shi His father Hwui was distinguished for his superior

[1] This title, which corresponds to the Chinese Fa sse, will be applied to Hiuen-Tsiang throughout the present work

[2] Old University at Peking

A book without elegance and propriety he would not look at, he would have no intercourse with those whose ways were opposed to the teaching of the holy and wise. He did not mix with those of his own age, nor spend his time at the market-gates Although cymbals and drums, accompanied by singing, resounded through the public streets, and the girls and boys congregated in crowds to assist in the games, singing and shouting the while, he would not quit his home Moreover, when he was still young he applied himself with diligence to the duties of piety and gentleness at home

His second brother Chang-tsi had previously become a disciple of Buddha, and dwelt in the convent of Tsing-tu at Loyang (the Eastern capital) Observing that the Master of the Law was deeply given to the study of religious doctrine, he therefore took him to his convent (seat of sacred wisdom) and taught him the method and practice of the Sacred Books (of Buddhism)

At this time there was an unexpected Royal mandate for the election at Loyang of fourteen priests, to be supported free of charge There were several hundred applicants The Master of the Law, owing to his youth, could not be a candidate, but he took his stand close by the Hall gate At this time the high-commissioner, Ch'ing-Shen-Kwo, having an aptitude for recognising talent in those whom he met, observing Hiuen-Tsiang, addressed him and said "My friend, who are you?" Replying he said "I am so-and-so" Again he asked "Do you wish to be elected?" He replied, "Yes! certainly, but not being sufficiently advanced in years, I am excluded" Again he asked: "And what is your motive in becoming a disciple?" He replied: "My only thought in taking this step is to spread abroad the light of the Religion[1] of Tathâgata, which we possess" Shen-Kwo was deeply gratified with the sentiment, and as the outward appearance of the youth was prepossessing, he selected him and took him to the officers and said "To repeat one's instruction is easy, but true self-possession and nerve are not so common, if you elect this youth, he will without doubt become an eminent member of the religion of Śâkya. Only I fear that neither I (Kwo) nor your Excellences will live to see the day when the soaring clouds shall distil the sweet dew (of Buddha's doctrine) But nevertheless, the illustrious character of this honourable youth will not be eclipsed, as I regard the matter"

[1] Transmitted Law.

And so the words of the noble Ch'ing prevailed.

Having been admitted as a recluse, he dwelt with his brother

At this time there was in the convent a Master of the Law, called King, who recited and preached upon the Sûtra of the Nirvâna Hiuen-Tsiang having got the book, studied it with such zeal that he could neither sleep nor eat. Moreover he studied under the direction of Yen, doctor of the law, the Sâstra of the Great Vehicle (Mahâyâna Sâstra), and thus every day his love for such studies increased. By hearing a book only once, he understood it thoroughly, and after a second reading he needed no further instructions, but remembered it throughout. All the assembly of priests were astonished, and when at their direction he mounted the pulpit, he expounded with precision and clearness the deep principles of Religion to the bottom The Masters and honourable body of priests listened with attention, he thus laid the foundation of his renown. At this time he was thirteen years old

After this the Sui dynasty lost the Empire, and the whole kingdom was in confusion The capital became a rendezvous for robbers, and the Ho and Lo[1] a resort of wild beasts The magistrates were destroyed and the body of priests either perished or took to flight. The streets were filled with bleached bones, and the burnt ruins of buildings Since the rebellion of Wang-tong, and dreadful riots of Liu-shih, when massacre and ruin prevailed everywhere, no such calamity had happened to the Empire The Master of the Law, although he was young, yet understood thoroughly the nature of these vicissitudes, and so he affectionately addressed his brother and said "Though this were our native city, yet how could we, during the present state of things, avoid death? Now I understand that the Prince of Tang has repulsed the people of Tsin-Yang, and established himself at Chang'an The empire relies on him, as on father and mother, let my brother go there with me!"

[1] Or, the district between the rivers Ho and Lo.

The brother agreeing with this advice, they went both together.

It was now the first year of Wu-Têh[1] At this time the country was without regular government, and all the troops were under arms The books of Confucius, and the sacred pages of Buddha were forgotten, every one was occupied with the arts of war There were therefore no further religious conferences in the capital, and the Master of the Law was greatly afflicted thereat

Yang-ti, the emperor,[2] in the first year of his reign had founded four Religious Houses in the Eastern capital, and had invited renowned priests of the empire to dwell therein Those who were summoned were men of very superior merit, and so it followed that crowds of eminent religious teachers (aiders of religion) resorted to these establishments, of whom King-tu and Sai-tsin were the chief In the last year of his reign, the country being in confusion, the necessaries of life began to fail in consequence many people travelled into the territory of [1] A.D 618 [2] The second Emperor of the Sui dynasty, A.D. 605-617.

Min and Shuh,[1] and amongst the rest the body of the priests (in question)

And now the Master of the Law addressed his brother and said "There is no religious business being attended to, and we cannot be idle, let us pass into the country of Shuh (Sz'chuen) and pursue our studies"

His brother having consented, they traversed together the valley of Tseu-wu and entered Han-chuen, and there they met the two Doctors Kong and King, the principal priests of their convent At the sight of these persons they were moved to tears with joy, and they abode with them a month and some days, receiving instruction, after this they went on together to the town of Shing-ta As there were many priests assembled in this town they founded there a religious place of assembly.[2] Thus they listened once more to Sai-tsin explaining the Shi-lun (Mahâyâna Samparigraha Sâstra) and the Pi-tan (Abhidharma Sâstra), whilst the Master Chin expounded the works of Kia-yen (Kâtyâyana) Studying thus without loss of a moment, and with great earnestness, after two or three years, they had thoroughly mastered the teaching of the different schools

At this time the Empire was visited with famine and riot, in Shuh alone there was abundance and peace, priests from every quarter therefore flocked there, and hundreds of men ever assembled under the pulpit of the Preaching Hall The Master of the Law by his profound wisdom and eminent talent in discussion, surpassed them all, so that throughout Wu and Shuh and Khing and Tsuh there was no one but had heard of him, and desired to witness his skill, as those of old respected the names of Li and Kwoh[3]

The Master of the Law for the sake of being with his brother took up his abode in the Hung-hwui Temple of

[1] North-West and South West China
[2] Or, they established Religious meetings. [3] Vide Mayers, 379 and 304.

Shing-tu, he too (i e, his brother) was remarkable for his saintly appearance, and was of a noble and commanding presence like that of his father He loved both the esoteric and exoteric doctrine[1] He was accustomed to preach on the Nirvâna Sûtra and the Sâstra called Shi-ta-shing,[2] and the Abhidharma (Sâstra) he was versed also in literature and history, but he excelled principally in the study of Lau (tseu) and Chwang[3] The people of Shuh so much loved him that the Governor of the Province, Tsan-Kung, gave him particular marks of his high respect When he undertook to write or speak on a subject his manner was so dignified and his discourse so free from embarrassment, that he was in no way inferior to his brother

As to the latter, he was grave and dignified, living apart from the crowd, and avoiding worldly concerns He traversed the eight expanses (heavens?), and penetrated the hidden secrets of nature Possessed of a noble ambition he desired to investigate thoroughly the meaning of the teaching of the Holy ones, and to restore the lost doctrine and to re-establish the people He was prepared to face wind and weather, and his mind, even if he stood by chance in the presence of the Emperor, would only gather strength and firmness certainly in these respects he surpassed his brother But both of them were distinguished by their singular talents and a certain sweetness of manner, they were renowned among their associates and of noble character, so that the brothers of Lu-Shan could not add to their fame.

When the Master of the Law had completed his twentieth year, that is, in the fifth year of the period Wu-têh, he was fully ordained in Shing-tu During the Rain-retreat he studied the Vinaya according to the Rule of the five divisions and seven sections,[4] after

[1] i.e., Buddhism and other literature

[2] Named before

[3] Mayers, 92.

[4] This is obscure. It may refer to the Vinaya of the Mahîsâsaka School, and to the seven sections of "Moral Science" referred to by Mr Alwis, Lecture II, p 19, as reprinted by the Pali-Text Society.

mastering this at one time, he then turned his attention to the Sûtras and Śâstras, and having investigated these he once more thought of going to the Capital, to inquire from the most celebrated masters concerning some difficulties he had met with (in his studies) However, being restrained from effecting his purpose by his brother's influence, he secretly embarked with some merchants, and passing down the river through the three gorges[1] he arrived at Hang-chow, where he retired into the temple called Tien-hwang The clergy and laity of that place had for a long time known of him by report, and now they came together and prayed him to explain the Sacred Books The Master of the Law on their account preached on the Shi-lun, and the Abhidharma From the summer to the winter, he went through each of these three times

At this time the King of Han-yang, by his highly virtuous character and his affectionate kindness, held his country in constraint and obedience Hearing of the arrival of the Master of the Law, he was exceedingly rejoiced, and went in person to salute him On the day when he stated the theme of the religious discussion, the king and his officers and a great number of lay and religious people came together to see him and hear him And now they pressed forward in vast bodies to raise a discussion.[2] The Master of the Law answered them in turn and gave them the desired explanations. They soon confessed themselves to be surpassed in argument—whilst the more learned were grieved to think that they were not able to gain the victory.

The king then spoke of him in admiration without bounds· and offered him abundant presents, which he declined to accept After the conferences he proceeded again northwards, seeking the most renowned priests Arriving at Siang-chow, he began to place his difficulties before Hiu, a Master of the Law, and ask for explanations of his doubts.

[1] Vide Mayers, No 873.
[2] Vide Julien, in loc.

From this he came to Chiu-chow, and there he visited Shin, a Master of the Law, and studied the Shing-shih-lun (Satyasiddha-vyâkarana-śâstra) After this he entered Chang'an and took up his abode in the Ta-hioh[1] Temple There he studied with Yoh, a Master of the Law, the Kiu-she (Kôsha) Śâstra After one reading he was perfected, and he retained the whole treatise in his memory Neither young nor old could surpass him Even in the most extremely difficult passages, beyond the comprehension of all the others, he alone could penetrate the meaning of these mysteries, and discover the sense.

At this time there were at Chang'an two great teachers, Shang and Pin, they had thoroughly explained the Two Vehicles, and investigated the Three Systems they were the leaders of the religious people in the Capital Both clergy and laity resorted to them, the entire district resounded with their praises, and their reputation spread beyond the sea, moreover their disciples were as numerous as the clouds Although they had mastered all the Sûtras, they loved to discourse principally on the Shi-ta-lun The Master of the Law had already distinguished himself in the land of Wu and Shuh, from the time he arrived at Chang'an, he persistently inquired of these teachers, and in a moment perceived the meaning of the deepest truths that they could explain They were filled with admiration and overwhelmed him with praise "Master," they said, "you can be well styled in the religion of Śâkya, 'a courier who traverses a thousand li in a day.' You are called to make the sun of wisdom shine again, but as for us, worn out by age, we fear that we shall not see the day!"

From this time the disciples all looked up to him with reverence, and his renown filled the capital.

[1] The Chinese form of Mahâbôdhi

The Master of the Law having visited the celebrated Masters all round, devoured their words and examined their principles, and so he found that each followed implicitly the teaching of his own school, but on verifying their doctrine he saw that the holy books differed much, so that he knew not which to follow He then resolved to travel to the Western world in order to ask about doubtful passages He also took the treatise called Shi-tsih-ti-lun[1] to explain his various doubts, this treatise is now called Yu-kia-sse-ti-lun[2] "Moreover," he said, "Fa-hien and Chi-yen, the first men of their age, were both able to search after the Law for the guidance and profit of the people, should I not aim to preserve their noble example (traces) so that their blameless character may not be lost to posterity? The duty of a great Teacher should be to follow in their steps."

On this he agreed to go in company with others and present a petition, but there was an imperial rescript forbidding (the project of going abroad) On this the others gave up the plan, the Master of the Law alone did not abandon his purpose, and resolved to travel alone Again, hearing of the obstructions and dangers of the Western road, he considered with himself and resolved that as he had been able to bear and overcome so many calamities common to men, he could not withdraw from his present purpose Then he entered a sacred building and made known his undertaking, and requested permission to carry it out, humbly praying[3] (vowing and begging) all the Holy Ones by their mysterious influences to cause his journey and his return to be without damage.

At the birth of the Master of the Law his mother had dreamt that she saw him going to the West clothed in a white robe—on which she said "You are my son,

[1] Saptadaśa bhûmi Śâstra.
[2] Yôgâchârya bhûmi Śâstra
[3] Much comment has been made on the use of the word "praying" in connection with these translations It is said that Buddhists do not pray. The Chinese, however, admits of no other rendering than that in the text, which denotes both "aspiration" and "supplication."

where then are you going?" In reply he said, "I am going to seek for the Law" This was the first indication, then, of his foreign travels.

In the third year and the eighth month of the period Chêng Kwan (630 A D), he was prepared to make a start. Desiring some happy omen, he dreamt at night that he saw in the middle of the great sea the Mount Sumeru, perfected with the four precious substances—its appearance supremely bright and majestic He thought he purposed to scale the Mount, but the boisterous waves arose aloft and swelled mightily. Moreover, there was neither ship nor raft, nevertheless, he had no shadow of fear, but with fixed purpose he entered (the waves) Suddenly he saw a lotus of stone burst as it were exultingly from the deep,[1] trying to put his foot on it, it retired, whilst he paused to behold it, it followed his feet and then disappeared,—in a moment he found himself at the foot of the Mount, but he could not climb its craggy and scarped sides as he tried to leap upwards with all his strength, there arose in a moment a mighty whirlwind which raised him aloft to the summit of the Mount Looking around him on the four sides from the top he beheld nought but an uninterrupted horizon, ravished with joy he awoke

On this he forthwith started on his journey He was then twenty-six years of age At this time there was a Tsin-Chow priest called Hiau-Ta who lived in the capital and studied the Nirvâna Sûtra. His study being finished he was returning to his home—they both went together therefore so far as Tsin-Chow Having stopped there one night, he met with an associate from Lan-Chow, going on with him he came to Lan-Chow and stopped there one night Here he met with some mounted men who were returning to Liang-Chow, after escorting an officer. Going with them, he came to that place, and stopped there a month and some days The priests and laymen invited him to explain the Nirvâna Sûtra and the Shi-lun, and the Pan-jo-king[1] The Master of the Law accordingly opened out the meaning of these works. Now Liang-Chow is the place of rendezvous for people dwelling to the West of the River moreover merchants belonging to the borders of Si-Fan (Tibet) and countries to the left of the T'sung-Ling Mountains, all come and go to this place without hindrance

[1] This passage is very obscure.

On the day of opening the Religious Conference, these men all came together to the place and offered jewels and precious things, as they bowed down and uttered the praises of the Master And on their return to their several countries they loudly applauded the Master of the Law to their Rulers, saying that he was about to go westwards to seek the Law in the country of the Brahmans

In consequence of this throughout the kingdoms of the West all persons were prepared with joyful heart to entertain him on his arrival, with magnificence

The day of the Conference being ended, they offered him in charity abundant gifts, gold and silver money, and white horses without number The Master of the Law, accepting one half, caused the lamps of the different convents to be lit, and as for the rest of the money he distributed it among the various religious establishments At this time the administration of the country was newly arranged, and the frontiers did not extend far There were severe restrictions placed on the people, who were forbidden to go abroad into foreign parts. Just then the governor of Liang-Chow was called Li-ta-liang Obedient to the Royal mandate he strictly adhered to the rules of prohibition And now there came a man who addressed Liang thus —"There is a priest here from Chang'an who is intending to go to the western regions— I do not know his plans" Liang, full of anxiety, called the Master of the Law to his presence and asked him the object of his arrival. The Master replied, "I wish to go to the West to seek for the Law." Liang hearing this, urged him to return to the capital.

[1] For the Sanscrit equivalents of these and other titles, vide Index to the Records of the Western World.

There was then at Liang-chow a Master of the Law called Hwui-wei, the most renowned of all priests of the region West of the River, for his spiritual perception and vast abilities He greatly admired the profound reasoning of the Master of the Law, and hearing of his intention to go in search of the Law, he was very greatly rejoiced Secretly sending two of his disciples, one called Hwui-lin, the other Taou-ching, he bade them conduct the Master in secret towards the West.

From this time he dare not be seen in public—during the daytime he hid himself, at night he went on.

In process of time he came to Kwa-chow, the governor To-Kiu having heard of his coming was greatly pleased, and provided him with all necessary provisions in plenty.

The Master of the Law inquiring as to the Western roads, he was told in reply that north from this point fifty li or more there was the river Hu-lu,[1] the lower part of which is wide, the upper course narrow Its stream is very impetuous and suddenly becomes deep, so that no boat can pass over it On the upper part is fixed the Yuh-mên barrier, so that one must pass by this; thus it is the key to the Western frontiers North-west beyond the barrier there are five signal towers in which officers, charged to watch, dwell—they are one hundred li apart In the space between them there is neither water nor herb Beyond the five towers stretches the desert called Mo-Kia-Yen, on the frontiers of the kingdom of I-gu.

On hearing these particulars he was filled with anxiety and distress. His horse was dead, and he did not know what steps to take, he remained there a month or so, sad and silent Before his departure there came certain spies from Liang-chow, who said "There is a priest called Hiuen-Tsiang who is purposing to enter on the Si-Fan territory All the governors of provinces and districts are ordered to detain him" The Governor of the Province, Li-chang, was a man of a religious turn (a man of religion and faith), and he suspected in his heart that the Master of the Law was (the person named), accordingly he secretly brought the mandate and showing it to Hiuen-Tsiang he said "Is not the Master the person here named?" The Master of the Law hesitated and made no reply, on which Chang said "The Master ought to speak the truth, and your disciple will make some plan for you to escape" The Master of the Law then replied truthfully Chang, hearing it, was filled with admiration and surprise and then he said, "Since the Master is indeed capable of such a project, I will for his sake destroy the document," and forthwith he tore it up before him "And now, Sir," he said, "you must depart in all haste"

[1] Records, I. p. 17, n. 31.

From this time his anxieties and fears greatly increased. Of the two novices who accompanied him, one, called Taou-ching, returned at once to Tun-hwang, the other, called Hwui-Lin, alone remained, but because the Master knew that he had not strength for so distant a journey he let him also return He now procured a horse by exchange, his only sorrow was that he had no guide to accompany him On this he proceeded to the temple where he was staying, and bowing before the image of Maitrêya he fervently prayed that he would find him a guide who would lead him past the barrier

That night there was a foreign priest in the temple who had a dream His name was Dharma, and in his dream he saw the Master sitting on a lotus flower and going towards the West Dharma was lost in surprise, and on the morrow he told his dream to the Master of the Law, whose heart was rejoiced thereat, taking it as a sign of his being able to go He answered Dharma, however, thus: "Dreams are vain and deceptive what need is there to examine into this matter?" Again he entered the Sacred precinct and worshipped in prayer

And now suddenly a foreign person came into the temple to worship Buddha, after doing which he saluted the Master of the Law by turning round him three times The Master then asked him his family and personal name, on which he said, "My family name is Shi, my personal name is Pan-to (Bandha?)" The foreigner then asked to be allowed to take on him the five Rules,[1] and having done so he was greatly rejoiced, and asked permission to come back, after a little while he returned with cakes and fruit. The Master of the Law observing his intelligence and strong build, and also his respectful manner, accordingly spoke to him about his purpose to go westwards The foreigner readily acquiesced, and said he would conduct the Master beyond the five signal towers The Master of the Law was filled with joy, and gave him some clothes and other property to exchange for a horse, and appointed a time of meeting

On the morrow at sundown he proceeded towards the bush, where shortly afterwards the foreigner with an old greybeard, likewise a foreign person, riding on a lean horse of a red colour, came to meet him The Master of the Law was not easy in his mind; on which the young foreigner said "This venerable greybeard is intimately acquainted with the Western roads, and has gone to and come back from I-gu more than thirty times I have therefore brought him to go with you, hoping it may give you assurance" Then the senior man said "The Western roads are difficult and bad, sand-streams stretch far and wide, evil sprites and hot winds, when they come, cannot be avoided numbers of men travelling together, although so many, are misled and lost, how much rather you, sir, going alone! how can you accomplish such a journey? I pray you, weigh the thing with yourself well, and do not trifle with your life."

[1] That is, of a lay disciple.

The Master replied. "This poor priest (i.e., Hiuen-Tsiang) aims to reach the Western world to search after the great Law—if he does not in the end reach the land of the Brahmans—there is no return to the Eastward, it matters not if he dies in the mid-route."

The foreign greybeard then said "If, sir, you will go you must ride this horse of mine he has gone to and fro to I-gu some fifteen times He is strong and knows the road, your horse, sir, is a small one and not suitable for the journey"

The Master of the Law then recalled to himself the following circumstance when he was at Chang'an forming his purpose of visiting the Western world, one day there was a diviner named Ho-wang-ta, who by reciting spells and prognosticating, could tell a great deal about the matters in which one was engaged The Master of the Law requested him to prognosticate about his journey. Ta said, "Sir! you may go, the appearance of your person as you go is that of one riding an old red horse, thin and skinny, the saddle is varnished, and in front it is bound with iron"

Now having observed that the horse which the old foreigner was riding was lean and of a red colour, and that the varnished saddle was bound with iron, agreeing with the words of the diviner, he made up his mind that this was the fulfilment of the augury, and accordingly he exchanged his horse The old greybeard was much rejoiced thereat, and making his respectful obeisance, they separated.

And now having packed his baggage, he went on through the night with the young foreigner In the third watch they came to the river, and saw the guard-house called the Yuh-Mên a good way off At ten li from the barrier the upper stream is not more than ten feet wide; on each side there is a scrub composed of the Wu-tung tree, the foreigner, cutting down some wood, made a bridge and spread over it branches, filling it up with sand Thus they led over the horses and went on.

The Master of the Law having crossed the river was filled with joy Being fatigued, he dismounted and sought some repose. The foreign guide also, separated about fifty paces or so from the Master, spread his mat on the ground and so they both slept. After a while the guide took his knife in his hand, and rising up, approached towards the Master of the Law, when about ten paces off, he turned round Not knowing what his intention was, and being in doubt about the matter, the Master rose from his mat and repeated some Scripture, and called on Kwan-yin Bôdhisattva The foreigner having seen this went back, and slept.

At the first dawn of day the Master called to him and bade him fetch water Having washed and taken some little food, he purposed to go onwards. The guide said "Your disciple is leading you forward on a way full of danger and very remote, there is no water or grass; only beyond the fifth tower[1] there is water It will be necessary to go there at night-time and get the water and pass on But if at any one place we are perceived, we are dead men! Is it not better to return and be at rest?" The Master of the Law having positively refused to return, they both went forward.[2] (Now the guide), with his knife drawn and his bow strung, begged the Master to go on in front, but the Master of the Law would not consent to the proposal The foreigner going by himself, after a few li stopped and said "Your disciple can go no further—he has great family concerns to attend to, and he is not willing to transgress the laws of his country" The Master of the Law, knowing his purpose, let him go back.

[1] So Julien translates it, but I think the meaning is, that water could only be found in the neighbourhood (under) the five watch towers

[2] The expression denotes that the guide kept looking up and down.

The young foreigner replied "It is impossible for the Master to carry out his plan how can you avoid being seized and brought back?"

The Master of the Law answered. "Though they cause my body to be cut up as small as the very dust, I will never return, and I here take an oath to this"

So the matter rested, he gave the young man his horse[1] as a mark of his obligation to him, and so they parted.

And now, alone and deserted, he traversed the sandy waste, his only means of observing the way being the heaps of bones and the horse-dung, and so on, thus slowly and cautiously advancing, he suddenly saw a body of troops, amounting to several hundreds, covering the sandy plain, sometimes they advanced and sometimes they halted The soldiers were clad in fur and felt. And now the appearance of camels and horses, and the glittering of standards and lances met his view, then suddenly fresh forms and figures changing into a thousand shapes appeared, sometimes at an immense distance and then close at hand, and then they dissolved into nothing.

The Master of the Law when he first beheld the sight thought they were robbers, but when he saw them come near and vanish, he knew that they were the hallucinations of demons.[2] Again, he heard in the void sounds of voices crying out: "Do not fear! do not fear!"[3] On this he composed himself, and having pushed on eighty li or so, he saw the first watch-tower. Fearing lest the lookouts should see him, he concealed himself in a hollow of sand until night; then going on west of the tower, he saw the water; and going down, he drank and washed his hands. Then as he was filling his water-vessel with water an arrow whistled past him and just grazed his knee, and in a moment another arrow Knowing then that he was discovered, he cried with a loud voice. "I am a priest come from the capital do not shoot me!" Then he led his horse towards the tower, whilst the men on guard opening the gate, came out, after looking at him they saw that he was indeed a priest, and so they entered in together to see the commander of the guard-house, whose name was Wang-siang Wang, having ordered the fire to be well lit up for the purpose of inspecting the Master, said "This is no priest of our country of Ho-si,[1] he is indeed one from the capital" then he asked him about his object in travelling

[1] That is, probably, the horse on which the young man rode, see p 15

[2] For a similar account, vide Rawlinson, Ancient Monarchies, III 49

[3] The account of the illusions witnessed in these deserts, would suggest the connection of the Chinese symbols Mo kia with the word Maga [Mo kia-yen, however, is the Chinese form of the (Takla) Makán desert.]

The Master of the Law replied: "Captain! have you not heard men of Liang-chow talk about a priest named Hiuen-Tsiang, who was about to proceed to the country of the Brahmans to seek for the Law?" He answered· "I have heard that Hiuen-Tsiang has returned already to the East Why have you come here?" The Master of the Law then took him to his horse, and showed him various places on which were written his name and familiar title On this the other was convinced He then said. "Sir, the western road is dangerous and long, you cannot succeed in your plan But I have no fault to find with you. I myself am a man of Tun-hwang and I will conduct you there There is a Master of the Law there called Chang-kiau, he reveres men of virtue (sages) and honours the priesthood he will be rejoiced to see you I ask your consent to this."

The Master of the Law replied· "My birthplace is Lo-yang, from a child I have been zealous for religion, in both capitals all those engaged in the study of the Law, in Wu and Shuh the most eminent priests without exception, have come to me for instruction, for their sakes I have explained and discussed and preached on religion; and I may boldly say that I am the leading authority of the time If I wished for further renown and encouragement, should I seek a patron at Tun-hwang? But being afflicted because I found the sacred books of the religion of Buddha were not always in agreement, and were imperfect, forgetful of my own comfort and disregarding all dangers, I have sworn to go to the West to seek for the Law bequeathed to the world But you, my patron, instead of rousing me to effort in my undertaking, would exhort me rather to turn back and give it up How then can you profess to have in common with myself a distaste for the follies of life, and wish with me to plant the seed, leading to Nirvâna? But if you must needs detain me here—let me be punished with death! Hiuen-Tsiang will never return one step to the East, nor give up his first intention!"

[1] That is, of Tangut.

Siang, hearing these words, filled with emotion, said: "I am indeed fortunate in having met with you! How can I but rejoice? But now, sir, you are fatigued and worn, take some sleep before the day dawns I will then myself conduct you, and show you the proper route" He then spread out a mat for him to rest upon

When the morning came, the Master of the Law having taken some food, Siang sent a man to fill his water-vessel, and providing him with some cakes made of flour, he himself conducted him for ten li or so, and then he said —"From this point, sir, the road goes straight on to the fourth watch-tower, the man there is a good-hearted person, moreover, he is a near relation of mine. His family name is Wang, his private name is Pi-lung When you come to see him you can say that I have sent you to him" Then, with tearful salutations, they parted.

Having gone on till night he came to the fourth watch-tower, and fearing lest he should be detained (the danger of detention), he purposed to get some water quietly, and to go on. Coming to the water, and scarcely there, there came an arrow flying towards him, turning round he called out as before, and went forward to the tower Then the men coming down, he entered the building The officer of the tower having spoken to him, he answered —"I purpose going to India, and my way is in this direction Wang-siang, the officer of the first tower, has commissioned me to meet you" Hearing this he was much pleased, and detained him for the night; moreover, he gave him a great leather bottle for water, and fodder for his horse Then conducting him by his side he said —"You had better not, sir, go towards the fifth tower, for the men there are rude and violent, and some mishap may befall you About 100 li from this is the Ye-ma spring, where you can replenish your supply of water"

Having gone on from this he forthwith entered on the Mo-kia-Yen desert, which is about 800 li in extent The old name for it is Sha-ho[1] There are no birds overhead, and no beasts below, there is neither water nor herb to be found On occasions, according to the sun's shadow, he would, with the utmost devotion, invoke the name of Kwan-shai-yin Bôdhisattva, and also (recite) the Pan-jo-sin Sûtra (Prajña-pâramîta-hṛidaya Sûtra)

At first when the Master of the Law was dwelling in Shuh he saw a diseased man whose body was covered with ulcers, his garments tattered and filthy Pitying the man he took him to his convent, and gave him clothing and food, the sick man, moved by a feeling of deep gratitude, gave to the Master of the Law this little Sûtra-book, and on this account he was in the habit of reciting it continually Arriving at the Sha-ho as he passed through it, he encountered all sorts of demon shapes and strange goblins, which seemed to surround him behind and before Although he invoked the name of Kwan-Yin, he could not drive them all away; but when he recited this Sûtra,[1] at the sound of the words they all disappeared in a moment Whenever he was in danger, it was to this alone that he trusted for his safety and deliverance

[1] That is, the Sandy desert (Sand-river).

After going a hundred li or so, he lost his way, and searching for the fountain called Ye-ma he could not find it, to get water from Then when he was going to drink from the pipe of his water-vessel, because of its weight it slipped from his hands, and the water was wasted; thus, a supply enough for 1000 li was lost in a moment[2] Then again, because of the winding character of the road, he did not know which way to follow it At length, purposing to return eastward to the fourth watch-tower, after going ten li, he thought thus within himself, "I made a vow at the first that if I did not succeed in reaching India I would never return a step to the East, what then am I now doing here? It is better to die in the attempt to go to the West, than to live by returning to the East" Then turning his bridle he invoked Kwan-Yin, and proceeded in a north-west direction

At this time (as he looked) in the four directions, the view was boundless, there were no traces either of man or horse, and in the night the demons and goblins raised fire-lights as many as the stars, in the day-time the driving wind blew the sand before it as in the season of rain But notwithstanding all this his heart was unaffected by fear, but he suffered from want of water, and was so parched with thirst that he could no longer go forward Thus for four nights and five days not a drop of water had he to wet his throat or mouth, his stomach was racked with a burning heat, and he was well-nigh thoroughly exhausted And now not being able to advance he lay down to rest on the sands, invoking

[1] This Sûtra is regarded by the Chinese as a Mantra, or charm, to the present day One of my native teachers (when I was in China), although he professed to despise Buddhism, used to repeat it from memory

[2] Yih-chiu = in a trice.

Kwan-Yin without intermission, although worn out with sufferings And as he addressed the Bôdhisattva, he said —"Hiuen-Tsiang in adventuring this journey does not seek for riches or worldly profit, he desires not to acquire fame, but only for the sake of the highest religious truth does his heart long to find the true Law I know that the Bôdhisattva lovingly regards all living creatures to deliver them from misery! Will not mine, bitter as they are, come to his knowledge!"

Thus he spake, (praying) with earnest heart and without cessation the while, till the middle of the fifth night, when suddenly a cool wind fanned (touched) his body, cold and refreshing as a bath of icy water. His eyes forthwith recovered their power of sight and his horse had strength to get up His body being thus refreshed, he lay still and fell asleep for a little while Whilst he slept thus he had a dream, and in his sleep he thought he saw a mighty spiritual being, several chang[1] in height, holding in his hand a halberd used for signalling, who spake thus 'Why are you still sleeping and not pressing on with all your might?"

The Master of the Law, rousing himself from slumber, pushed on for ten li, when his horse suddenly started off another way and could not be brought back or turned. Having gone some li in the new direction, he saw all at once several acres of green grass, getting off his horse, he let him graze, when leaving the grass, purposing to resume his journey, about ten paces off he came to a pool of water, sweet, and bright as a mirror; dismounting again, he drank without stint, and so his body and vital powers were restored once more, and both man and horse obtained refreshment and ease. Now we may conclude that this water and grass were not natural supplies, but undoubtedly were produced through the loving pity of Bôdhisattva, and it is a proof of his guileless character and spiritual power.[2]

[1] A chang is = 141 English inches

[2] This passage is apparently parenthetical, and is not translated by Julien.

Having bivouacked near the grass and fountain of water for a day, on the day following he filled his water-vessel and cut some grass, and proceeded onward After two days more they got out of the desert and arrived at I-gu The myriads of dangers and difficulties through which he passed cannot be recounted in detail Having arrived at I-gu, he stopped in a temple where there were three Chinese priests, one was an old man whose vestment was without any girdle, and whose feet were bare Coming forth, he embraced the Master of the Law, with many cries and piteous exclamations which he could not restrain, but at length he said, "How could I have hoped at this time, ever to have seen again a man of my own country?" The Master of the Law likewise, as he saw him, was moved to tears

The foreign priests outside, and the foreign kings also, came to pay their respects to him (i e Hiuen-Tsiang) The king invited him to his own house and provided him with abundance of entertainment

At this time the king of Kau-chang, Khio-wen-t'ai, had previously sent some messengers to I-gu, and on this day as they were about to return they met the Master of the Law Accordingly when they had got back they told the king (of his arrival) The king hearing it, immediately sent messengers to order the king of I-gu to send the Master of the Law to him Moreover the king selected several tens of superior horses and sent his officers and chief ministers to escort him to his presence After the usual delay of ten days, the king's messengers came and explained the king's plan, and then they earnestly besought him to comply with the arrangement. The Master of the Law had purposed in his mind to take (the road leading) past the Mausoleum (Feou-tu, Stûpa) of the Khan, but now, notwithstanding his respectful refusal of the king of Kau-chang's request, he could not escape from it—and so was obliged to go. Crossing the southern desert, after six days they came to the borders of Kauchang, to the town of Pih-li And now, the sun just set, the Master of the Law wished to stop in this town, but the magistrates and the messengers said, "The royal city is near—we beg you to advance—there are several relays of horses in front" The Master of the Law left his old red horse which he had ridden hitherto behind, to be sent on afterwards, and then in the middle of the night they reached the royal city The officer of the guard at the gate having informed the king, he commanded the gate to be opened

When the Master of the Law entered the city, the king, surrounded by his attendants in front and rear, bearing lighted torches, came forth in person to meet him. The Master of the Law having entered the inner hall, took his seat beneath a precious canopy in a pavilion of two stages After salutation the king said in a most agreeable manner, "From the time that I knew of your honour's name, my happiness has prevented me from sleeping or eating, after calculating the distance of the road, I was sure you would arrive to-night, and therefore my wife and children with myself have taken no sleep, but reading the Sacred Books, have awaited your arrival with respect"

A moment after, the queen, with several tens of servant-women, came in to pay her respects.

And now as the day-dawn came on, he said "After a fatiguing journey I have a wish to sleep" The king hereupon retired to his palace and left several eunuchs to wait on him during the night

Then in the morning before the Master of the Law had arisen, the king in person, with the queen also, and her followers, waiting below, came to the door to salute him after which the king said "Your disciple (i e the king) cannot but think how wonderful it is that you by yourself alone should have been able to surmount the difficulties and dangers of the road in coming hither." And in saying these words he could not refrain from tears and exclamations of wonder After this he ordered food to be provided according to the rules of religion Moreover, by the side of the palace there was an oratory to which the king himself conducted the Master of the Law and installed him there Moreover, he commissioned certain eunuchs to wait on him and guard him.

In this convent there was a certain Master of the Law called Tun who formerly studied at Chang'an and was well versed in the details of religion. The king, who highly esteemed him, commissioned him to go visit the Master of the Law. After a short interview he left, on which the king again ordered a Master of the Law called Kwo-tong-wang, about eighty years of age, to take up his residence with the Master of the Law, with a view to persuade him to remain where he was and not to go to the Western regions The Master of the Law was unwilling to assent, and after ten days' delay he wished to be allowed to go on his way The king said "I have already commissioned the Master Tong to confer with you and request you to remain here What, sir, is your intention?"

The Master replied, "To request me to remain here is surely an act of goodness on the part of the king, but truly my heart cannot consent"

The king replied "When I travelled in the great country (i.e China) with my teacher during the Sui emperors' time, I visited in succession the Eastern and Western capitals, and the country between Yen-tai and Fen-tsin and I saw many renowned priests, but my heart felt no affection for them but from the time I heard the name of the Master of the Law my body and soul have been filled with joy, my hands have played and my feet have danced Let me persuade you, sir, to remain with me here I will provide for your wants to the end of my life, and I will undertake that all the people of my realm shall become your disciples, if, as I hope, you on your part will instruct them The priests and their followers, although not numerous, still amount to several thousands I will cause them to take the Sacred book in hand (which you select) and to attend with the rest to your instructions I pray you accede to my desire and earnest request, and do not think of going on your journey to the West"

The Master, in declining the invitation, said "How can I, a poor and solitary priest, sufficiently acknowledge the king's generosity But I undertook this journey not with a view to receive religious offerings Grieved at the imperfect knowledge of religion in my native land, and the poorness and defective condition of the Sacred Texts, and being myself agitated by doubts as to the truth, I determined to go and find out the truth for myself Hence at the risk of my life I have set out for the West, to inquire after interpretations not yet known. My purpose is that the sweet dew of the expanded law[1] shall not only water Kapila, but that the mysterious words may also spread through the regions of the East The thought of finding my way through the mountains and my earnest desire to seek a friend of illustrious ability, this has, day by day, strengthened my purpose, why then would you cause me to stop midway! I pray your majesty to change your mind, and do not overpower me with an excessive friendship"

The king replied, "I am moved by an overpowering affection towards you, and the Master of the Law must stop here and receive my religious offerings The Ts'ung Ling Mountains may fall down, but my purpose cannot change Be assured of my sincerity and do not doubt my real affection"

The Master of the Law answered. "What need is there of so many words to prove the deep regard the king has for me? But Hiuen-Tsiang has come to the West for the sake of the Law, and as he has not yet obtained his object he cannot halt in the middle of his enterprise Wherefore I respectfully request to be excused, and that your majesty would put yourself in my place Moreover, your august majesty in days gone by has prepared an excellent field of merit, and so has become a ruler of men Not only are you the preserver and sustainer of your subjects, but you are also the protector of the doctrine of Buddha It is only reasonable therefore that you should support and disseminate (the principles of religion). How then is it that you are now opposing that end?"

[1] Fang-teng, an expression (omitted by Julien) commonly used for the Vaipulya class of Sûtras It points to the "breadth and width" (squared-equally) of this class of book Cf. the Sc. Vipula.

The king replied "Never would I venture to place obstacles in the way of the diffusion of Religion, but because my realm has no teacher and guide, I would therefore detain the Master of the Law, in order that he may convert the ignorant and foolish"

But the Master of the Law continued to excuse himself and would not consent (to remain)

Then the king, colouring with anger and stretching out his hand beyond the sleeve, said, in loud words and a menacing manner "I have a different way of deciding this question, sir! If, sir, you still think you can go when you like, I will detain you here by force and send you back to your own country I commend you to think over this, it will be better for you to obey."

The Master answered "Hiuen-Tsiang has come here for the sake of the great Law, indeed! and now I have met with one who opposes me—but you have only power over my body, your majesty cannot touch my will or my spirit."

And now he could speak no more on account of his frequent sighs, but the king remained unmoved, still he caused an additional supply of necessary provisions, and each day he pressed on him food provided from the king's own store.

The Master of the Law, seeing that he would be detained by force in opposition to his original design, declared with an oath that he would eat nothing, in order to affect the king's heart So he sat in a grave posture, and during three days he neither ate nor drank, on the fourth day the king seeing that the Master was becoming fainter and fainter, overcome with shame and sorrow, he bowed down to the ground before him and said "The Master of the Law has free permission to go to the West! I pray you take a slight morning meal!"

The Master of the Law still fearing his insincerity, required him to repeat his words with his hand pointing to the sun The king answered "If it needs be so, let us both go into the presence of Buddha, and bind ourselves mutually together!" Accordingly they went both together into the sacred precinct and paid adoration to Buddha With them was the royal mother, and the Empress Chang So regarding the Master of the Law as a brother, he gave him free permission to go and seek for the Law "But," he added, "when you return I request you to stop in this kingdom for three years to receive my offerings, and if in future ages you arrive at the condition of a Buddha, grant that I, like Prasênajita or Bimbasâra râjas, may be permitted to protect and patronise you!"

Then he invited him to remain one month and to expound the Sûtra called Jin-wang-pan-jo,[1] in order that during the interval the king might prepare travelling garments for the Master The Master giving his full consent, the empress was greatly rejoiced and desired to be connected with the Master in close relationship during successive ages

[1] Cf. Nanjio's Catalogue, No 17

Then the Master consented to eat (from this we can see) the firmness of his will and determination.

And now on a day following the king prepared a large pavilion for the purpose of beginning the religious conferences, the pavilion could seat three hundred persons or so, the empress sat on the right of the king, the masters and chief nobles, all took different seats, to attend the preaching.

Every day at the time of preaching, the king himself conducted the Master, preceding him with a brazier containing incense. When ascending the pulpit the king, humbly bowing, placed his foot-stool and begged him to mount and be seated. Day by day this was done. After the sermon he begged the Master of the Law to arrange for four Śrâmaneras to wait upon him and to make thirty priests' vestments, and considering that the western regions are very cold, he had various articles of clothing made suitable for such a climate, such as face-coverings, gloves, leather boots, and so on. Moreover he gave him a hundred gold ounces, and three myriads of silver pieces, with five hundred rolls of satin and taffeta, enough for the outward and home journey of the Master during twenty years He gave him also thirty horses and twenty-four servants (hand-helps) Moreover he commissioned Hun-Sin, one of the imperial censors belonging to his court, to conduct him to the Khan Yeh-hu [1] Again he composed twenty-four official documents to be presented at Kiu-chi and twenty-four different countries, each letter had a large roll of satin, accompanying it as a credential. Lastly, he loaded two conveyances with five hundred pieces of satin and taffeta, and fruit of luscious taste, as a present for the Khan Yeh-hu. Accompanying this present was a letter to the following purport: "The Master of the Law, a friend

[1] Julien has Che hu, and probably he is right. It appears to me that this is not so much a personal name, as a titular rank of your humble servant, desires to search for the Law in the country of the Brahmans. I beseech the Khan to be kind to him, as he has ever been kind to me, his humble servant" He requested also that he would require the rulers of the different countries of the West to conduct the Master through their territories and provide relays of horses

The Master of the Law, seeing that the king sent the novices, and these letters, and the silks and satins, &c, with him, was overpowered by a sense of his extraordinary liberality, and made the following grateful oration to him saying —

"Hiuen-Tsiang has heard that whoever would traverse the deep expanse of ocean or river must use boat and oar—so those who would rescue (guide) the body of living creatures engulphed (in ignorance), must avail themselves of the holy words (of Buddha) Now for this cause Tathâgata, exercising his great love as of one towards an only son, was born on this much-polluted earth, reflecting in himself the wisdom of the three enlightenments (vidyâs), and, as the sun, illuminating the darkness. The cloud of his love hovered over the summit of the heavens of the universe, and the rain of the law watered the borders of the three thousand worlds (the Chiliocosm) After procuring advantage and quiet, he quitted the world for the state of true peace—and his bequeathed doctrine has spread Eastwards for six hundred years past. His illustrious doctrine stretched through the country of Hu and Lo, and has shone as a radiant star in Tsin and Liang

"In agreement with the mysterious character of this doctrine the world has progressed in its higher destiny; only distant people coming to interpret the doctrine (the sounds of his doctrine) are not in agreement. The time of the Holy One is remote from us: and so the sense of his doctrine is differently expounded: but as the taste of the fruit of different trees of the same kind is the same, so the principles of the schools as they now exist are not different The contentions of the North and South have indeed for many hundred years agitated our land with doubts, and no able master has been found able to dispel them

"Hiuen-Tsiang owing to his former deserts was privileged at an early date to adopt the religious life, and till he had completed about twenty years, received instruction from his masters The famous sages and eminent friends were all carefully consulted and questioned by him The principles of the Great and Little Vehicle were each briefly investigated by him

"His hand never ceased to examine the different Sacred Books, but notwithstanding all his pains he was never free from doubts, until, wearied with his perplexities, he longed to wend his way to the monastery of the Jêtavana, and to bend his steps to the Vulture Peak, that he might there pay his adoration and be satisfied as to his difficulties But at the same time he knew that the heavens could not be measured with an inch-tube, nor the ocean be sounded by a cock's feather

"But he could not give up the purpose which humbly inspired him with resolution, and so making preparation he set out on his way, and through much painful travel arrived at I-gu.

"I respectfully desire that your majesty, possessed of the harmonising influences of heaven and earth, and inspired by the soothing power of the two principles,[1] may exercise your authority with advantage to all your subjects Your renown stretches to the East as far as China, to the West the hundred tribes of uncivilised people, the lands of Leou-lan and of the Yue-ti, the districts of Kiu-sse and Long-wang, all acknowledge your profound virtues, and are obliged to you for your condescending qualities, and in addition, your respect for learned men and your love for erudition, exhibit themselves in your loving attention to their advantage

[1] That is, as it would seem, the two principles that pervade Nature, the yang and yin.

"Having learned of my arrival, your majesty has been graciously pleased to order me escorts, and provisions for my entertainment Since I came your goodness has continually increased and you have allowed me to discourse publicly on religious subjects You have moreover condescended to allow me the title of 'brother,' and have entrusted me with letters of recommendation to the Princes of twenty and more kingdoms of the West, you have invited them to show me consideration and kindness, and ordered them to provide me with necessary escort and provisions in proceeding from one district to another Excited by pity for the wants of a poor pilgrim who is finding his way to Western countries, and on account of the rigours of the climate which will affect him on his journey, you have ordered four novices to accompany him, and you have provided for his use religious vestments, padded caps, boots, and other articles of clothing

"Lastly, you have added gifts of silks and taffetas, and a large quantity of money, gold and silver, to provide for his wants during twenty years in coming and going I am overpowered by a sense of my obligation, and know not how to return sufficient thanks The waters of the united Rivers[1] do not equal in amount your royal gifts, the Tsu'ng-ling mountains are small and light compared with the abundance of your benefits.

"What anxious fear can I now have in facing the passage of the ice-bound glaciers?[2]—no anxiety will afflict me lest I should be too late to pay my reverence at the spots where stand "the heavenly ladder" (at Kapatha), and "the tree of wisdom" (at Gâyâ) By acceding to my wishes you have placed me under this obligation, and to your kind offices all is due.

"After questioning the different masters and receiving

[1] Julien gives "the Yellow River," which may be right

[2] Julien translates "of the Hiuen-tu" But the text has ling k'i, referring probably to the Muzart Pass from their mouths the explanation of the true doctrine, I shall return to my own country and there translate the books I have obtained. Thus shall be spread abroad a knowledge of unknown doctrines, I shall unravel the tangle of error and destroy the misleading influences of false teaching, I shall repair the deficiencies of the bequeathed doctrine of Buddha, and fix the aim of the mysterious teaching (of the schools)

"Perchance by these meritorious works I may in some degree repay your large beneficence—but considering the greatness of the task before me (the distance of the road), I can delay no further, to-morrow I must take leave of your majesty, and this causes me much pain

"I can only, in consideration of your majesty's goodness, offer the tribute of my sincere gratitude"

The king, in reply, said "You have, respected Master, allowed me to regard you as a brother, and therefore you have the right to share with me the wealth of my kingdom Why then offer me so many thanks?"

On the day of his departure the king, with the religious community and the great ministers and people, escorted him to without the city on his way to the West; then the king and the people embraced him with tears, and their cries and groans resounded on every side

After this the king ordered the queen and the rest to return home, but he and his suite, with the chief of the religious community, accompanied the pilgrim for several scores of li.

The princes and chiefs of the other kingdoms did so likewise, paying him the utmost respect.

After this he journeyed westward, and after passing through the towns of Wu-pwan and To-tsin, he entered the country of O-ki-ni (Yenki)[1]

[1] Probably equivalent to Yanghi, as in Yanghi-Hissar We here take up the Pilgrim's route as detailed in the Si-yu-ki.

BOOK II.

Commencing with O-ki-ni, and ending with Kie-jo kio-she (Kanauj)

FROM this, going westward, he came to the kingdom of O-ki-ni,[1] here is the fountain of A-fu[2] the Master The fountain is situated to the south of the road on a sandy hillock The hillock is several chang in height, and the water comes from the hill half way up

The tradition says There was formerly a band of merchantmen, several hundred in number, who found their supply of water exhausted on their mid-journey Arriving at this point exhausted and worn out, they knew not what to do At this time there was a priest in their company, who had brought no provisions for the journey, but relied on the alms of the rest for his support. The others considering the case, said "This priest serves Buddha on this account we, as a company, give him our offerings Although he has travelled ten thousand li, he has had no provision of his own—and now, whilst we are full of anxiety, he is unmoved by any care: we ought to ask him about it"

The priest, in reply to their question, said "You, sirs, who are anxious to get a supply of water, ought each one of you to adore Buddha, and receive the three Refuges and take on you the five moral obligations Then I will, for your sakes, ascend yonder hill and cause a supply of water to proceed from it."

The entire company, having arrived at such a con-

[1] Cf. Records of the Western World, vol. i p 17 ss

[2] Possibly connected with the Sc Ap or Apsu

dition of distress, agreed to his order, and received the rules of moral obligation, after which the priest instructed them thus "After I have gone up the hill you must cry out 'A-fu-sse! cause water to flow down for our use! enough to sustain us'" With these words he left them After a little while the company called out and requested, as he had instructed them In a moment the water began to descend in supplies sufficient for their necessity

The whole congregation were filled with joy and gratitude, but as the Master did not return they went in a body up the hill to see what had happened, and found that he was dead (become extinct) And now having wept and lamented, they burnt his body according to the rules of the Western world, on the place where they found him they collected stones and made a tower, which still exists Moreover, the water has not ceased to flow, but, according to the number of the travellers who pass by this place, it flows down for their use, in small or large supply If there is no one there, the fountain dries up (is a mere secretion)

The Master of the Law, with the rest, passed the night near the fountain At sunrise he went on and crossed the "Silver Mountain" This mountain is very high and extensive It is from this place that the silver is dug which supplies the Western countries with their silver currency

On the west of the mountain he encountered a band of robbers, after giving them what they demanded, they departed

After a little they came to the place of the site of the royal city, and passed the night by the side of a stream. At this time some foreign merchants in their company, to the number of several tens, coveting an early sale of their merchandise, privately went forward in the middle of the night Scarcely had they gone ten li when they met a band of robbers who murdered every one of them And so, when the Master of the Law and the others came to the place, they found their dead bodies there, but all their riches gone, they passed on, deeply affected with the sight, and shortly afterwards they saw the royal city before them

The king of O-ki-ni (with his ministers) coming forth to meet (the Master of the Law), conducted him, and invited him to enter (the Palace) as his guest This country formerly was subjected to attacks from brigands belonging to Kau-chang, and as there was still ill feeling (between the two countries, the king) was not willing to provide an escort [1]

The Master of the Law, stopping one night, went forwards and crossed a great river To the west he traversed a level valley, and after going several hundred li he arrived at the borders of the kingdom of K'iu-chi [formerly written Kwi-tzu, but incorrectly] As he approached the capital, the king, accompanied by his ministers and a celebrated priest called Mo-cha-kiu-to (Mokshagupta, or Mokshakûta) came forth to meet him, other priests, to the number of several thousands, had remained at the eastern gate of the city, outside which they had erected a wide floating pavilion (pointed like a tent), and having brought the images (of Buddha) in procession, with sounds of music, had placed them there

The Master of the Law having arrived, the priests rising to meet him, addressed him in affectionate language, and then each one returned to his seat They then caused a priest to offer to the Master of the Law a bouquet of flowers freshly gathered The Master of the Law having accepted it, advanced before the image of Buddha, scattering the flowers and offering worship After this Mokshagupta took his seat beside him. The two being seated, the priests again formed a procession

[1] As Julien remarks, we must remember that Hiuen-Tsiang was accompanied by an escort from Kau-chang with flowers (in their hands), after which they offered grape juice as they passed Having thus accepted flowers and grape juice in the first temple, he next received the same in the other temples, and thus going the round, the day began to decline, and the priests and their attendants gradually dispersed

There were several decades of men belonging to Kau-chang who had become monks in K'iu-chi, they dwelt apart in one particular temple, this temple was to the south-east of the city. As the Master of the Law came from their native country, they were the first to invite him to stop the night with them Because he accepted this invitation the king and the priests returned each to his own abode. The next day the king invited him to pass over to his palace to receive every kind of religious offerings and the three pure aliments[1] The Master of the Law would not accept them, at which the king was very vexed, the Master of the Law replied, "This is the license granted by the 'gradual' system of the Law; but the Great Vehicle in which Hiuen-Tsiang has been instructed, does not admit of it I will accept the other reserved food"

Having finished his repast, he proceeded in a north-west direction from the city to the temple called 'O-she li-ni[2] where the priest Mokshagupta resided. Gupta by his rare ability and intelligence had acquired the respect of all the different schools of religion He had travelled in India for twenty years and more, learning (the Sacred Books) Although he had gone through all the Sûtras, yet he excelled in the knowledge of the Shing-ming (Śâbdavidyâ Sûtra) The king and the people of the kingdom were all affected by the utmost respect for him, and had named him Tuh-po (without equal) When he saw the Master of the Law come to his abode, he received him with the politeness due to a guest, not knowing as yet his advanced acquaintance with religion

[1] For the "three pure aliments," and the "gradual system," vide Jul. ii. 2 n.

[2] Vide Records, &c., vol i., p. 22 n.

Addressing the Master of the Law, he said "In this land we have the Tsa-sin,[1] the Kiu-she,[2] the Pi-sha,[3] and other Sûtras, you can gain sufficient knowledge by studying these here, without troubling yourself to voyage to the West, encountering all sorts of dangers."

The Master of the Law replied: "And have you here the Yoga-Śâstra or not?"

He answered "What need ask about such an heretical book as that? The true disciple of Buddha does not study such a work!"

The Master of the Law was at first filled with reverence for the person (of Mokshagupta), but hearing this reply he regarded him as dirt, and answering, said "In our country too we have long had the Vibhâshâ and Kôsha, but I have been sorry to observe their logic superficial and their language weak they do not speak of the highest perfection[4] On this account I have come so far as this, desiring to be instructed in the Yoga Sâstra belonging to the Great Vehicle And the Yôga, what is it but the revelation of Maitrêya, the Bôdhisattva next to become Buddha (lit, the last personal Bodhisattva), and to call such a book heretical, how is it you are not afraid of the bottomless pit?"

The other replied: "You have not yet understood the Vibhâshâ and the other Sûtras, how can you say they do not contain the deep principles of religion?"

The Master replied: "Do you, sir, at present understand them?" He answered, "I have a complete knowledge of them"

The Master then cited the beginning of the Kôsha, and asked him to continue. Forthwith he began to blunder, and as he came at last to a dead stop, he

[1] Samyuktâbhidarma.
[2] The Kosha.
[3] The Vibhâshâ.
[4] The "highest perfection" inculcated by the Yoga system of Buddhism, is, union with the supreme object of worship.

changed colour, and said with perturbation: "You may question me on some other portion of the work."

Then he referred to another passage, but neither could he recite this, but said: "The Sâstra has no such passage as the one you name" Now at this time the king's uncle, called Chi-Yueh, had become a monk and was well acquainted with Sûtras and Sâstras; he was on this occasion seated by the side (of Hiuen-Tsiang) Forthwith, he testified (to the correctness of the quotation), in these words "This passage is really taken from the Sâstra," and then, taking the original, he read it out

Mokshagupta on this was exceedingly abashed and said "I am getting old and forgetful"

He was questioned also regarding the other Sûtras, but could give no correct explanation

And now, as the snow-passes of Mount Ling were not yet open, the Master could not advance, but was obliged to remain, for sixty days or so, detained by this circumstance On going out to observe the condition of the roads, if they happened to meet together and speak (i e the Master and Mokshagupta), he did not sit down, but spoke either standing, or as if anxious to pass on And in a private way he addressed the people and said "This monk of China is not an easy man to discuss with, if he goes to India the younger class of disciples will be unwilling to present themselves (i e for discussion or examination).

So much was the Master feared by him and admired.

The day of his departure having come, the king gave him servants and camels and horses, and attended by monks and laymen belonging to the capital, he accompanied him for a good distance.

Going west from this two days' journey, he encountered about 2000 Turkish (Tuh-Kiuch) robbers on horseback; they were in the act of dividing among themselves the booty they had got from a caravan, and when they could not agree they began to fight among themselves and so were dispersed.

Then going forward 600 li they crossed a small desert and arrived at the kingdom of Poh-luh-kia[1] [formerly called Kih-meh], and stopped there one night. Then proceeding north-west and going 300 li, they crossed a desert and came to the Ling[2] Mountain, which forms the northern angle of the T'sung Ling range This mountain is steep and dangerous, and reaches to the clouds (heaven) From the creation the perpetual snow which has collected here in piles, has been changed into glaciers which melt neither in winter nor summer, the hard-frozen and cold sheets of water rise mingling with the clouds; looking at them the eye is blinded with the glare, so that it cannot long gaze at them The icy peaks fall down sometimes and lie athwart the road, some of them a hundred feet high, and others several tens of feet wide On this account the extreme difficulty of climbing over the first, and the danger of crossing the others Moreover the wind, and the snow driven in confused masses, make it difficult to escape an icy coldness of body though wrapped in heavy folds of fur-bound garments When desirous of food or sleep there is no dry place to be found for a halt, the only way is to hang the pot for cooking, and to spread the mat on the ice for sleeping

After seven days they began to get out of the mountain, twelve or fourteen of the company were starved and frozen to death, whilst the number of the oxen and horses that perished was still greater

After leaving the mountains they arrived at the lake called Tsing[3] The circuit of this lake is 1400 or 1500 li, longer from east to west, narrower from north to south. Looking at the watery expanse, the wind suddenly arising swells the waves to a height of several chang

[1] Bâlukâ.—Records, &c., i 24. [2] Op cit. i. 25 n.
[3] Vide "Records," p 25, n 80

Following the borders of the sea for about 500 li in a north-west direction, the Master came to the city of Su-yeh.[1] Here he encountered the Khan of the Turks called Yeh-hu, who was then engaged on a hunting expedition. The horses of these barbarous people are very fine, the Khan's person was covered with a robe of green satin, and his hair was loose, only it was bound round with a silken band some ten feet in length, which was twisted round his head and fell down behind He was surrounded by about 200 officers, who were all clothed in brocade stuff, with their hair braided On the right and left he was attended by independent troops all clothed in furs and fine spun hair garments, they carried lances and bows and standards, and were mounted on camels and horses The eye could not estimate their numbers.

When they saw each other, the Khan, full of joy, said: "Stay here for a while, after two or three days I will come back." He then directed one of his chief officers, Ta-mo-chi, to conduct him towards a large tent and to arrange things for his comfort. After three days in this residence the Khan returned, and taking the Master of the Law by the hand he conducted him within

The tent of the Khan is a large pavilion adorned with golden flower ornaments which blind the eye with their glitter. All the officers (Ta kwan) had spread out in front long mats, in two rows, on which they sat, they were clad in shining garments of embroidered silk The body-guard of the Khan stood behind them. Regarding these circumstances of state, although he was but the ruler of a wandering horde, yet there was a certain dignified arrangement about his surroundings.

The Master of the Law proceeding towards the tent, when about thirty paces from it, the Khan came forth and conducted him with reverent condescension within, speaking to him through an interpreter they then entered and were seated

[1] Or "shé"

The Turks worship Fire they do not use wooden seats, because wood contains fire, and so even in worship they never seat themselves, but only spread padded mats on the ground and so go through with it. But for the sake of the Master of the Law they brought an iron warming-pan covered with a thick padding, and requested him to be seated thereon A short time afterwards they introduced the Chinese mission and the legates from Kau-chang with their letters of introduction and presents

The Khan examined for himself the one and the other and was much pleased thereat, he then ordered the envoys to be seated, and caused wine to be offered to them with the sound of music

The Khan with his ministers drank to the envoys, whilst he caused the juice of the grape[1] to be offered to the Master of the Law. After this they drank one with the other, challenging one another in succession, filling their cups and emptying them in succession, ever more and more animated, during all which time the sounds of all kind of music (Kin, Mae, Li, &c)[2] resounded in confused clang. And although the character of the music was the common sort of the barbarians, yet it was nevertheless very diverting both to the ear and the eye, pleasing the thoughts and the mind

In a little while there were other articles of food brought forward, such as boiled quarters of mutton and veal, which were heaped up before the guests but for the Master of the Law they prepared distinct entertainment, consisting of the pure articles of food such as rice-cakes, cream, sugar-candy, honey-sticks (barley-sugar ?), raisins, &c.

[1] Pu-t'au, cf the Greek βότρυς (Kingsmill)

[2] Music of the North, South, East, and West (Julien in loc).

When the feast was over they sent round the grape-wine again, and then asked the Master of the Law to expound (declare) the doctrines of religion Then he, with a view to admonish them, spoke upon the subject of the ten precepts (Dasaśîlam), love of preserving life, and the Pârâmitas, and works that lead to final deliverance.

Raising his hands, he (the King) humbly prostrated himself to the ground, and joyously accepted the teaching of the Master.

And now having remained there several days, the Khan exhorted him to stop altogether, saying "Sir, you have no need to go to India (In-tu-kia-kwo),[1] that country is very hot, the tenth month there, is as warm as our fifth month as I regard your appearance I am afraid you will succumb under the climate The men there are naked-blacks, without any sense of decorum, and not fit to look at!"

The Master replied "Notwithstanding all this I desire to go and gaze on the sacred traces, and earnestly to search for the law"

The Khan then ordered inquiry to be made in his army for any one who could speak the Chinese language and that of other countries So they found a young man who had lived for many years at Chang'an, and thoroughly understood the Chinese language

He was appointed, under the title of Mo-to-ta-kwan, to prepare letters of commendation for the different countries and to accompany the Master to the kingdom of Kapiśa Moreover, the Khan gave to Hiuen-Tsiang a complete set of vestments in red satin, and fifty pieces of silk, and then with his officers in person he conducted him a distance of ten li, or so.

From this, going west 400 li or so, he arrived at Ping-yu[2] This is also called "The Thousand Springs"

[1] I would call attention to this unusual form for India, and compare the Sindhuka king, named in the "Friendly Letter" of Nagârjuna

[2] Myn-bulak (Bungheul) vide Records, &c., i 27 n

The district is several hundred li square. There are a multitude of pools and springs here, and also trees wonderful for their luxuriant verdure and height. The cool refreshing moisture makes this a fit place for the Khan, when he would avoid the heat of summer

From Ping-yu, advancing westward 150 li, we come to the town of Ta-lo-sse (Taras) Again going south-west 200 li, we come to the town of Peh-shwui, again going south-west 200 li, we come to Kong-yu city, again going south 50 li, we come to the kingdom of Nu-chih-kien, again going west 200 li, we come to the kingdom of Che-shi. [This means "The stone country," Ch Ed] This country, on the west, borders on the river Yeh-yeh (or, She-She) Again going west 1000 li or so, we come to the kingdom of Su-tu-li-sse-na To the east this kingdom borders on the Yeh-yeh river This river comes from the northern plateau of the Ts'ung-Ling Mountains and flows to the north-west Again going north-west, we enter on a great desert without water or grass We advance guided by observing the bones left on the way After 500 li or so we arrive at the country of Sa-mo-kien. [This means "The happy country"][1] The king and people do not believe in the law of Buddha, but their religion consists in sacrificing to fire. There are here two religious foundations, but no priests dwell in them If stranger-priests seek shelter therein, the barbarians follow them with burning fire and will not permit them to remain there

The Master of the Law on his first arrival was treated disdainfully by the king, but after the first night's rest, he discoursed for the king's sake on the destiny (cause and consequence) of men and Devas he lauded the meritorious qualities of Buddha· he set forth, by way of exhortation, the character of religious merit The king was rejoiced, and requested permission to take the moral precepts as a disciple, and from that time showed him the highest respect. The two young disciples went to the temple to worship, on which the barbarians again pursued them with burning fire—the two Śrâmanêras going back told the king of it The king hearing it ordered them to arrest the fire-carriers, having done so, he assembled the people and ordered the hands of the culprits to be cut off The Master of the Law, wishing to exhort them to a virtuous life, would not consent to their bodies being mutilated and so saved them The king having beaten them severely, expelled them from the city

[1] For the places named in this section, vide Records, &c, i. p. 27 ss.

From this circumstance the higher and lower sort of people regarded him respectfully, and as a body sought to be instructed in the faith. Accordingly, having summoned a large assembly, he received many of them into the priesthood and established them in the convents It was thus that he transformed their badly disposed (heretical) hearts, and corrected their evil customs. And so it was wherever he went

Again going about 300 li to the west, he arrived at K'iuh-shwang-ni-kia[1] Again going west 200 li or so, we come[2] to the kingdom of Ho-Han [i e "The eastern-rest country," Ch Ed] Again going west 400 li, we come to the country of Pu-ho[3] [This means "The middle-rest country," Ch. Ed] Again going west 100[4] li or so, we come to the Fa-ti[5] country [This means "The western-rest country," Ch Ed] Again going west 500 li, we come to the Kingdom of Ho-li-sih-mi-kia (Khwârazm). This country on the East borders on the Po-tsu river (the Oxus) Again going south-west 300 li or so, we come to the country of Kie-shwang-na (Kesh) Again going south-west 200 li, we enter the mountains The moun-

[1] Kashania.

[2] The Pilgrim did not visit these countries himself, but wrote from hearsay — Vide Records, i 34 n

[3] Bokhâra.

[4] The Si-yu ki gives 400 li

[5] The Fa ti or Vati country probably represents the country of the Yue-ti (Vati)

tain road is deep and dangerous, scarcely wide enough in some places for men to pass, and, moreover, without herbage or water, going 300 li or so through the mountains, we enter the Iron Gates Here the perpendicular precipices, like walls on either side, afford but a narrow passage. The stone contains much iron, which is dug out. Attached to the wall on either side there is a folding-gate, with many cast-iron bells suspended above it, hence the name this is the barrier against the advance of the Turks Passing through the Iron Gates we arrive at the country of Tu-ho-lo [formerly by mistake written To-fo-lo, Ch Ed] From this, having gone several hundred li, we cross the Oxus, and arrive at the Kingdom of Hwo (Kunduz) This was the residence of the eldest son of the Khan Yeh-hu[1] called Ta-tu-sheh [Sheh is an official title, Ch Ed] It was he who had married the sister of the king of Kau-chang.

Moreover, the king of Kau-chang had sent letters to this place in recommendation of the Master of the Law, on his arrival, the princess Ho-kia-tun[2] was dead, and Ta-tu-sheh was sick. When he heard that the Master of the Law had come from Kau-chang with letters for himself and his wife, he was overpowered with grief thereat, and calling the Master, said: "Your humble servant at view of you has received sight! Would that you could remain here a little while, and rest If I should recover my health, I will personally conduct you to the country of the Brahmans"

At this time, moreover, there was a Brahman priest who had come to recite certain charms—which gradually had the effect of removing (the sickness of the prince) Afterwards he (i e the Prince), married the younger sister of the Princess Ho-kia-tun. She, at the suggestion of her nephew (the son of her sister who was dead), prepared a poison and killed her husband. The Sheh being dead, the princess of Kau-chang having only a little child, the nephew who had the title Télé violently seized the government and became Sheh, after which he married his step-mother

[1] Or, She-hu. [2] The princess Kho (Julien in loc.)

As the funeral ceremony (of the late prince) was being celebrated, Hiuen-Tsiang was detained for more than a month.

There was then a Śramana called Ta-mo-sang-kia (Dharmasiñha), residing in this country. He had travelled for instruction to India, beyond the T'sung-ling Mountains on the western side they called him Fa-tsiang (i.e. Artizan of the Law, or law-maker) The priests of Su-leh (Kashgar) and Yu-tin (Khotan) dare not discuss with him The Master of the Law (Hiuen-Tsiang), wishing to know his profound or shallow knowledge, sent messengers to him, to ask how many Sûtras or Śâstras he was able to explain The disciples who were surrounding him, when they heard the message were piqued—whilst Dharmasiñha answered with a smile· "I can explain any of them you like" The Master of the Law, knowing that he did not understand the Great Vehicle, turned his questions to the Vibhâshâ and other Sûtras belonging to the "Little Vehicle" These questions, not easy to solve, made him allow his inferiority. The disciples were filled with shame From this time whenever they met, the Śramana was full of expressions of pleasure, and ceased not to praise the Master, acknowledging that he was by no means his equal

At this time, the new Sheh having been established in his government, the Master of the Law asked him for official envoys to conduct him, and for post-horses (U-lo. Ulak—Jul), as he desired to go south towards the country of the Brahmans. The Sheh, after consideration, said· "Your disciple among his possessions has the country of Fo-ho-lo (Baktra), bordering northwards on the Oxus; men call the capital city the little Râjagrîha—so many are the sacred traces therein I beg, sir, you will spend some time in paying reverence there (to these sacred spots), and afterwards take up your carriage and go southward."

At this time there were in this place many tens of priests of Baktra, who had come to express sympathy with the new Sheh on the death of his predecessor,[1] when the Master of the Law met them, he expressed his intention, and to this they replied "You ought to go with us at once—the road is open now, but if you delay here longer the change of place will be difficult" The Master of the Law on these words forthwith took leave of the Sheh, and taking up his carriage, departed with those priests. Having arrived at this place (i e Balkh), observing the city and its suburbs, he noticed the apparently barren character of the city and its neighbourhood, but yet, in truth, it was most excellent land.

There were about a hundred Sañghârâmas and three thousand priests, or so, all belonging to the "Little Vehicle."[2]

Outside the city on the south-west quarter there is the Navasañghârâma, which is remarkable for its imposing structure and unusual ornaments Inside the Sañghârâma, in the hall of Buddha, there is the water-pot of Buddha, able to contain about two pecks There is also here a tooth of Buddha, about one inch long, and eight or nine-tenths in breadth, of a yellow-white colour, this relic always irradiates a bright miraculous light.

There is also here the sweeping brush of Buddha, made of Kaśa grass, it is about three feet long, and perhaps seven inches round, the handle is ornamented with various precious substances. These three things are brought out every feast day, and the priests and laymen draw near to worship them The most faithful, behold a spiritual radiancy proceeding from them.

[1] Whom the Sheh had caused to be poisoned.
[2] This seems to show that Buddhism had reached Balkh at an early date.

To the north of the Saṅghârâma there is a Stûpa about 200 feet high To the south-west of the Saṅghârâma there is a Vihâra, of an old date All the priests who have attained to the four degrees of holiness (the fruition of the four paths) during successive ages, dwelling here, after their Nirvâna, have had erected to their memory towers, the foundations of which, to the number of several hundreds, are close together in this vicinity Fifty li to the north-west of the capital (the great city), we come to the town of Ti-wei, forty li to the north of this town there is the town of Po-li There are two Stûpas in this town, three chang in height in former days when Buddha first arrived at Supreme Enlightenment he accepted some honey and meal at the hands of two merchants, who were in that place, when they had heard from him the fine moral precepts and the ten rules (sikshâpadas), they asked to be allowed to present their religious offerings Tathâgata gave to them, for the purpose, some pieces of his nails and portions of his hair, and ordered them to construct a tower, and furnished them with a model The two merchantmen,[1] taking (the relics), returned to their own country (or, when about to return to their own country), and built these two sacred (spiritual) towers[2] About seventy li to the west of the city there is a Stûpa more than two chang high, they were built in the days of Kâśyapa Buddha long ago

In the New Saṅghârâma there was (a priest) of the kingdom of Tcheka who had studied the three Pitakas belonging to the Little Vehicle, his name was Prajñâkara Hearing that there were many sacred traces of religion in the country of Fo-ho-lo (Baktra), he had therefore come to worship and reverence them This man was of singular wisdom and learning, so that as a youth he was

[1] The Chinese is Chang-ché, which corresponds to the Sc Shrêshṭin and the Pali Setṭhi —Vide Records, 1 47, n 159.

[2] Whatever the historical truth of this record may be, it points at any rate to the belief that even in the days of Buddha, merchants from Baktria had regular commerce with India.

distinguished by his great sagacity He had thoroughly sounded the nine collections,[1] and mastered the four Âgamas The fame of his exposition of the principles of the faith had spread throughout India. He was perfectly acquainted with the Abhidharma of the Little Vehicle, the Kosha of Kâtyâyana, the Shatpadâbhidharma and other works

Hearing that the Master of the Law had come from a distance to search for religious books, he was exceedingly glad to meet him The Master of the Law, in the course of his statement respecting his doubts and difficulties about the Kosha and Vibhâshâ and other books, asked him for some explanations, and was answered in each case with extreme clearness He remained here a month and studied the Vibhâshâ Śâstra. In this Sanghârâma, moreover, there were two other (priests) versed in the Tripitaka according to the Little Vehicle, their names were Ta-mo-pi-li (Dharmapriya) and Ta-mo-ki-li (Dharmakara), they were exceedingly honoured by the others Seeing the sacred features of the Master of the Law and the marks of intelligence which distinguished him, they paid him marked respect

There were at this time to the south-west of Baktra the countries named Jui-mo-to (Jumadha) and Hu-shi-kien (Juzgâna)[2] Their kings, hearing that the Master of the Law had come from a distant country, both sent their chief ministers to salute him, and to request him to pass through their countries and receive religious offerings, but he declined to go The messengers having returned and again come back several times, in consequence of his continual refusals, at last he complied with the request. The kings, being overjoyed, offered him gold and precious stones, and abundance of drink and food, the Master of the Law declined all such gifts, and returned

[1] That is, the nine Aṅgas or divisions of the Sacred Books of Buddhism Vide Burnouf, Introduction, p 51, ss.

[2] For these places, vide Records, &c., vol. I, p 48

Going south from Balkh in company with Prajñâkara, the Master of the Law, they entered the kingdom of Kie-chi (Gaz)

To the south-east of this kingdom they entered the great Snowy Mountains, and going 600 li and more they left the boundaries of the Tu-ho-lo (Tukhâra) country, and entered the kingdom of Fan-yen-na (Bâmiyân) This country from east to west is about 2000 li in extent It is situated in the middle of the Snowy Mountains, the muddy roads and dangers of the passes and tracks are double those of the frozen desert. The pelting hail and snowstorms go on perpetually intermingled, then, the winding and crooked passes that are met with, then, in the level parts, the mud stretching for several changs, so that what Sung-yu says about the dangers of the western region, (viz, of Sz'chuen and the Wu-shan),[1] "the storeyed ice-like mountains, and the flying snow for a thousand li," is applicable to this district also

Alas! if it were not that I had determined to seek the incomparable Law for the sake of all that lives, much rather would I have pleaded that this body of mine, left by my parents, should have gone on its (last) journey (i e that I should have died) And so Wang-tsun,[2] when he had accomplished the embankments of Kiu-che, himself said· "I am but a loyal servant of Han" The Master of the Law having surmounted the precipices of the Snowy Mountains in search for the sacred Law, is also able to be named "a true son of Tathâgata"

It was thus he gradually arrived at Bâmiyân, the chief town of which possesses something like ten religious foundations, with several thousand priests, these belong to the Little Vehicle, according to the Lôkôttara Vâdinah school

[1] Vide Mayers, Manual, &c., sub 873
[2] Probably the character Tsun is for To. Mayers, 822.

The king of Bâmiyân went forth to escort him, and invited him within his palace to receive his religious offerings after a day or two he went forth to make his observations

There were there two priests belonging to the Mahâsaṅghika school, whose names were Âryadâsa and Âryasêna, both of them deeply versed in the Law When they met the Master of the Law they were full of admiration, that so remote a country as China should possess such a distinguished priest They conducted him from place to place to pay his reverence, or to inspect, and did not cease in their attention and services to him.

North-east of the capital, on the declivity of a hill, there is a standing stone figure[1] about 150 feet high. To the east of the figure there is a Saṅghârâma, to the east of which is a standing figure of Śakya, made of calamine stone,[2] in height one hundred feet Within the Saṅghârâma there is a figure of Buddha represented as when he was asleep on entering Nirvâna, about 1000 feet in length All these figures are of an imposing character and extremely good (execution)

Going south-east from this, 200 li or so, crossing the great Snowy Mountains, we come to a small valley[3] where there is a Saṅghârâma, in which there is a tooth of Buddha, and also a tooth of a Pratyêka Buddha, who lived at the beginning of the present Kalpa. This tooth is five inches long, and four inches broad, or a little less. Moreover, there is the tooth of a Chakravartin monarch (king of the golden wheel), three inches long, and two inches broad. Moreover, there is the iron pot (pâtra), which Shang-no-kia-fo-sha (Śânakavâsa) carried, able to hold eight or nine pints, and also his Saṅghâti robe, of a bright red colour This man, during five hundred births

[1] But the text does not say "of Buddha," as Julien translates Vie, p 69

[2] Or, *covered with bronze plates.

[3] The Chinese is ch'uen (a stream), which has here, and also in Fa-hien, cap xvi. ad finem, the sense of a valley or gorge.

in the world, had always been born with this robe on him, but afterwards (when he was ordained) changed it (or, it changed) into a Kashâya garment, the story is a long one, as may be read in the other narrative[1] (i e the Si-yu-ki)

Thus passed fifteen days, and then, leaving Bâmiyân, on the second day he encountered a snowstorm, which caused him to miss his road Coming to a small sand hillock, he met some hunters, who showed him the way. Crossing the Black Ridge,[2] he arrived at the borders of Kapiśa.

This kingdom is about 4000 li in circuit On the north it is bounded (backed) by the Snowy Mountains. The king is selected from the Kshattriya caste He is a clever, shrewd man, and has brought under his control some ten kingdoms

When (Hiuen-Tsiang) was about to arrive at the capital, the king and all the priests went forth from the city to escort him

There are some hundred or so religious foundations, the residents in which had sharp words together, each convent wishing to induce the Master to stop there.

There was a temple belonging to the Little Vehicle, which was named Sha-lo-kia[3] The story goes that the temple was built some time ago, when the son of the Han Emperor was held as an hostage. The priests of this temple said: "Our temple was originally founded by a son of the Han Emperor, and now, as you come from that country, you ought first to stop with us."

The Master of the Law seeing them thus, was deeply impressed, and as his companion, Hwui-Sing (i e Prajñâkara, see p 50), Master of the Law, belonged to this school of the Little Vehicle, to which these priests were attached, he did not desire to live in a temple belonging to the Great Vehicle, accordingly they went to stop at the temple made for the hostage.

[1] Vide Records, vol i, p 53.
[2] (Siâh Kôh), or Kôh Baba.
[3] For some remarks on this name, vide Records, i. p. 57, n 203.

Moreover, at this time there was treasured here (by the hostage), under the foot of the image of the Great-Spirit King,[1] on the south side of the eastern gate of the Hall of Buddha, a countless quantity of jewels and gems, as a means for the after repairs of the building The priests, in gratitude for such favours, had in various places painted on the walls the figure of the hostage prince At the time of the conclusion of the Rest, (i e. the Rest during the Rains), this congregation holds an assembly for preaching and reciting the Scriptures, as a means for planting (or, perpetuating his) religious merit,[2] this custom has been handed down from generation to generation, and is still observed

Recently there was a wicked king who, fired by a covetous disposition, desired to carry off the priests' treasure Accordingly he sent men to dig underneath the foot of the Spirit-King Then the earth greatly quaked, and the figure of the parrot which was on the top of his head, seeing them digging, flapped his wings, and screamed violently The king and his troops were all seized with terror and fell to the earth, after this, they returned home

There is in the temple a Stûpa The tee (encircling rings) of this building having tumbled down, the priests wished to take the treasure and to repair it On making the attempt, the earth again trembled and roared, so that no one dared to go near

When the Master of the Law arrived, the whole assembly came together, and, as a body, requested the Master of the Law (to assist them), setting forth and relating the previous circumstances

The Master of the Law and the others then proceeded to the place of the Spirit (that is, the place of the statue

[1] That is, Vaiśravana vide Records, b 1, n 207

[2] Julien's translation is too diffuse There is no mention of "the hostage" in the text, and the symbol fuh relates to "religious merit." It would seem, however, that the religious service was designed to perpetuate the memory of the hostage of the Spirit-King), and burning incense, he said "The royal hostage formerly concealed here these precious things, purposing them for the meritorious object of building (i e repairing the building), now then the time has arrived for opening the treasure (charity) and using it We pray you to penetrate the truth of our purpose, and for a while restrain the power (virtue) of your august presence, and permit this proceeding

"I, Hiuen-Tsiang, will personally superintend (the work of excavation), and will measure accurately the weight, and dispense to the master of the Work, justly, what is necessary for the execution of the repairs, and will permit no useless waste Only we beseech the spiritual power of the god to condescend to search out the truth (of our intentions)"

Having said these words, he ordered the men to dig into the ground; they did so calmly and without molestation At the depth of seven or eight feet, they came to a great copper vessel, which contained several hundred catties of gold, and several scores of pearls The great congregation were filled with joy, and without exception paid their services to the Master of the Law The Master of the Law kept the Rain-Rest in this temple.

The king of this country thinks little of the polite arts, he entirely trusts to (the teaching of) the Great Vehicle As he was fond of the sight of religious conferences and discussions, he asked the Master of the Law and Prajñâkara (Doctor) of the three Pitakas, to a religious assembly to be held in a Temple of the Great Vehicle In that Temple there was (a Doctor) of the three Pitakas called Manôjñaghosha (Mo-nu-jo-kiu-sha), and also a Sa-po-to, A-li-ye-fa-mo (i e Arya-varma of the Sarvâstivâdin school), and also a priest of the Mi-sha-seh school (Mahîsâsaka), named Ku-na-po-to (Gunabhadra); these priests were reputed the chief in that convent Their acquirements, however, were not universal, but confined to one or other points in the Great or Little (Vehicle), as the case might be, and although clear on that point, yet narrowed in its extent (length) But the Master of the Law had thoroughly examined the teaching of all the schools, and answered the questions put to him by all comers, according to the several systems of doctrine so that all present were constrained to acknowledge his superiority

Thus for five days (the discussion continued), then the assembly dispersed

The king, being overjoyed, gave to the Master of the Law, as a distinct present, five pieces of embroidered silk, and to the others, different offerings

The Rain-Retreat being ended in the Sha-lo-kia convent, Prajñâkara returned (to Balkh), in obedience to the request of the king of Tukhâra The Master of the Law having separated from him proceeded eastward, and having advanced some 600 li, passing the Black Ridge, he entered the borders of India, and came to the country of Lan-po (Lamghân)

This country is about 1000 li in circuit There are ten Sañghârâmas, the priests are all devoted to the Great Vehicle Having stopped three days, he proceeded southward, and came to a little hill on which was a Stûpa. This is where Buddha stopped in former days when he came here from the south, in consequence of which, men, in after days, built this Stûpa from a feeling of affectionate respect All places to the north of this are called Mi-li-ku (i e frontier lands) [Mleċċha lands] Tathâgata, when he desired to instruct and convert (these people), in so doing, used to pass through the air in coming and going, and would not tread on the earth, as the earth trembled and shook under his footsteps.

From this, going south twenty li or so, and descending the mountain ridge,[1] after crossing a river, he came to the country of Na-kie-lo-ho (Nagarahâra) Two li to the south-east of the capital of the country is a Stûpa 300 feet or so in height, it was built by Aśôka râja It was here Śâkya Bôdhisattva, in the second Asañkhya of years (from the present time), met Jen-tang-Fo (Dipañkara Buddha) He spread his deer-skin robe and unloosed his hair, to preserve (the Buddha) from the mud, and in consequence received a predictive assurance (that he would become a Buddha) Although there have passed Kalpa destructions (since that period), the traces of this event remain intact The Dêvas here scatter all sorts of flowers and continually pay their religious services

[1] But there is nothing said about "the black" ridge, as Julien translates.

The Master of the Law when he arrived at this spot, paid his devotions and religiously circumambulated the building

There was then, by the side of the Stûpa, an old priest who explained for the Master's sake the origin of the building.

The Master's question was this "The period of the Bôdhisattva's service in spreading his hair was in the second Asâñkhya of years, but since this period to the present time an innumerable number of Kalpas have elapsed In the course of these Kalpas the universe has been repeatedly perfected and destroyed As when the destruction by fire has taken place, even Mount Sumeru has been reduced to ashes, how is it that this religious monument (or, these sacred traces), cannot be destroyed?"

In reply, he said "At the time of the dissolution of the universe this monument also is destroyed, but at the period of restoration, this old vestige is also restored to its original condition. So, just as Mount Sumeru is restored, after its destruction, to its former condition, why should this sacred relic alone not reappear? This comparison can admit of no question." Such was the celebrated reply

About ten li to the south-west is a Stûpa, this is the place where Buddha (i e when he was Dipañkara) bought the flowers[1]

[1] For the story of Dipañkara purchasing the flowers, vide Records, I 92, 93.

Again, to the south-east, after crossing a sandy peak, we come to the town of Buddha's skull bone[1] In this town is a double-storeyed tower and in the upper storey is a small Stûpa, made of the seven precious substances, which contains the bone of the top of the head of Tathâgata This bone is one foot and two inches round The marks of the hair orifices are quite distinct The colour of the bone is a yellowish white, it is enclosed in a jewelled box If any one wishes to know the indications of his guilt or his religious merit, he mixes some powdered incense into a paste, which he spreads upon a piece of silken stuff, and then presses it on the top of the bone according to the resulting indications the good fortune or ill fortune of the man, is determined

The Master of the Law, in taking an impression, obtained the figure of the Bôdhi tree of the two Śrâmanêras who also took impressions, the first obtained a figure of Buddha, the other a figure of a lotus The Brahman who guarded the bone was overjoyed as he turned to the Master, with his fingers interlaced (rounded like a ball), and then scattering flowers before him, said· "That indication which the Master has obtained is extremely rare, and is a sure sign of your having a portion of true wisdom (Bôdhi)"

There is also here a tower of the skull bone shaped like a lotus leaf

Also the eyeball of Buddha, as large as an Âmra fruit, and so bright that its rays dart forth from the box to some distance outside

Again, there is the Sanghâti robe of Buddha, made of a very fine silky cotton stuff.

Again, there is the staff of Buddha, the rings whereof are made of tin, and the haft of sandalwood All these the Master of the Law adored with reverence, after which, in consequence of this opportunity of paying his heartfelt respect, he presented (at the different shrines), fifty gold pieces, one thousand silver pieces, four silken banners, two pieces of brocaded (satin), and two sets of religious vestments: then having scattered flowers, and again prostrated himself in worship, he went forth

[1] Hidda.

And now he heard that to the south-west of the city of Dipankara, about twenty li or so, there was the cave where dwelt the Nâgarâja Gopâla Tathâgata in former days having tamed this Nâga, left to him as a bequest his shadow to remain in the cavern The Master of the Law wished to go there to worship; but he was told that the roads were deserted and dangerous, and moreover that they were frequented by robbers, and that for the last two or three years those who had gone for the purpose of seeing (the shadow) had not succeeded in their purpose, and so there were few now who went

And now, when the Master wished to go to pay his adoration to this relic, the envoys sent with him by the king of Kapiśa, earnestly longing to return, besought him not to delay any longer nor think of going to the cave

The Master of the Law replied "The shadow of the true body of Tathâgata, during a hundred thousand kalpas can with difficulty be met with how much rather, then, having come so far as this, should I not go to worship it? As for you, advance on your journey slowly, and I will rejoin you after a little while."

On this he went alone, and arriving at the town of Dipaṅkara, he entered a monastery, and inquired some particulars as to the road, but found no one who would go with him as a guide After a while he met with a little boy who said 'The farm-house of the convent is not far from the place, I will guide you so far." The Master then went with the boy and arrived at the farm-house, where he passed the night He then found an old man who knew the place, and so with him as a guide they set out together After going a few li they were met by five robbers who came upon them sword in hand. The Master of the Law immediately removed his loose cloak, so as to let his religious vestments appear The robbers said "Where is the Master going?" In reply he said "I am wishful to worship the shadow of Buddha" The robbers said "Have you not heard that this road is infested with brigands?" He answered "Robbers are human beings I am now going to adore Buddha, though the road be filled with savage beasts, I have no fear, how much less should I fear you, who are my human benefactors (or, protectors)?"

The robbers were touched to the heart by these words and allowed him to go to perform his act of worship, and so they arrived at the cave

The cave lies to the eastward of a stony water-course, the door through the wall (of the cave) faces the west Looking into the cave all is wrapped in gloom and no object visible The old man spoke to the Master thus "You must enter and pass straight on to the eastern wall, when you touch that, stop, and then go backwards fifty paces and no more, then face the eastern wall and look, the shadow is in that place" The Master of the Law entered (the cave) and paced forward, it may be fifty strides,[1] and touched the eastern wall, and then according to the directions he went backwards and stood still Then animated by the most sincere desire, he paid his worship with a hundred and more prostrations. but he saw nothing He reproached himself for his shortcomings, and with lamentable cries, he expressed his deep sorrow Then again with his utmost heart he paid his worship and recited the Shing-kwan and other sûtras, he also repeated the gâthas of the Buddhas, making one prostration after each verse of praise After about one hundred prostrations, he saw on the eastern wall a great light about the size of a Pâtra[2] (in circuit), which disappeared in a moment Sorrowful and yet rejoicing he

[1] According to this, if he came back fifty paces, he must have stood at the entrance of the cave

[2] Alms-dish, or bowl.

again paid his adorations, and then there appeared a great light round as a basin, which again as quickly disappeared Then, filled with additional ardour and desire, he vowed within himself that if he did not see the shadow of the Lord of the world, that he would never leave the place Then he performed two hundred more acts of worship, and then, whilst the whole cave was brightened up with light, the shadow of Tathâgata of a shining white colour appeared on the wall, as when the opening clouds suddenly reveal the golden Mount and its excellent indications Bright were the divine lineaments of his face, and as the Master gazed in awe and holy reverence, he knew not how to compare the spectacle, the body of Buddha and his kashâya robe were of a yellowish red colour, and from his knees upward the distinguishing marks of his person were exceedingly glorious, but below, the lotus throne on which he sat was slightly obscured On the left and right of the shadow and somewhat behind, were visible the shadows of Bôdhisattvas and the holy priests surrounding them

Having gazed on the vision, he summoned six men, from some distance outside the gate, to get some fire, and bring it in for burning incense But as soon as the fire was brought in, the shadow of Buddha disappeared Then he quickly ordered them to put the fire out, and, on his earnest request, the shadow again appeared

Among the six men, five of the number were able to see the shadow, but one of them could see nothing

Thus the appearance lasted for the short space of half a mealtime, during which having uttered his praises in worship and scattered flowers and incense, the light then suddenly disappeared [1]

Having left the cave, the Brahman, who had been his guide, was filled with joy as he extolled the miracle, moreover he said: "If it had not been for the sincere faith and prayers of the Master, this could not have happened" Outside the door of the cave there are many sacred traces [as detailed in the other narrative]

[1] The entire story of the "Shadow" seems to indicate the use of a lantern and slide as a pious fraud Had such contrivances already been introduced into India from Persia?

As they were returning together those five brigands, laying aside their arms, received the moral precepts and departed.

After this the Master rejoined his companions, and passing over the mountains in a south-easterly direction, after 500 li or so, they came to the country of Gandhâra

This kingdom on the eastern side borders on the Sin-tu river, the capital is called Po-lu-sha-po-lo[1] In this country many sages and saints from old days composed Śâstras, as for instance Na-lo-yen-ti'en (Nârayâna Deva), Wu-cho-Pu-sa (Asañgha Bodhisattva), Shi-tsin-pu-sa (Vasubandhu Bodhisattva), Fa-k'iu (Dharmatrâta), Ju-i (Manôrhita), Hi-tsun-che (the venerable Parsvika), and others, all of whom came from this kingdom

To the north-east of the capital there is erected a precious tower of the Pâtra of Buddha

This pâtra afterwards removed itself through various countries, and at present is found in the country of Po-lai-na-se (Banâras)

Eight or nine li to the south-east beyond the capital is a Pi-po-lo tree, about 100 feet high The four past Buddhas have all sat underneath this tree, and now there are the figures of these four Tathâgatas placed here The 996 Buddhas yet to come will also sit here

By the side of this tree there is a Stûpa, this was built by Kanishka-râja, it is 400 feet high, the foundation part is a li and a half in circuit, and 150 feet high. Above the Stûpa is raised a series of imperishable (diamond) wheels (or, metal rings), twenty-five in number In the Stûpa there are śarîras (relics) of Buddha to the amount of ten pecks (one hoh)

[1] Purushapura (Peshâwar)

A hundred paces or so to the south-west of the great Stûpa there is a figure, carved out of white stone, eighteen feet high, it stands with its face to the north Very many spiritual portents (are exhibited here) Frequently there are persons who see the statue at night going round the great Stûpa

A hundred li or so to the north-east of the Sanghârâma of Kanishka, we cross a great river and come to the town of Po-sih-kie-lo-fa-ti (Pushkalâvati) To the east of the town there is a Stûpa built by Asôka-râja Here the four past Buddhas have preached the Law

Four or five li to the north of the town is a Sanghârâma, within which is a Stûpa, about 200 feet high, erected by Asôka râja, it was here that Sâkya Buddha when formerly living (acting) as a Bôdhisattva, delighted in performing deeds of charity For a thousand births he was born as king of this country, and here, during these births, he plucked out his eyes (and gave them in charity) Of all these acts there are innumerable holy traces

The Master of the Law visited these sacred spots in succession, and offered worship

When he came to a great Tower, or to a great Sanghârâma, he always gave away a portion of the gold and silver and silks and religious vestments which he had received as a charitable donation from the king of Kau-Chang Having delayed long enough to show the sincerity of his faith in making these offerings, he departed

From this place he arrived at the town of U-to-kia-han-cha (Utakhanda)

Travelling northwards from this town and passing over mountains and valleys, after going 600 li or so, he entered the country of U-chang-na (Udyâna)

On either side of the river Su-po-sa-tu (Subhavâstu) there were formerly 1400 Sanghârâmas, with some 18,000 priests, but now all is desert and depopulated.[1]

[1] In Sung yun's time (A D 520) the country was in a high state of prosperity It was probably devastated by Mihirakula

The priests who observe the Rules and follow the traditions of religion, belong to five schools, viz., the Dharmaguptas, the Mahîśâsakas, the Kâśyapiyas, the Sarvâstivâdas, and the Mahâsanghikas

The king mostly lives in the town of Mung-kie-li (Mungali),[1] which is well populated and prosperous To the east of the town four or five li, is a great stûpa celebrated for its miraculous capabilities This is the place where formerly Buddha (was born) as Kshânti Rishi, and for the sake of Kalirâja allowed his body to be cut in pieces[2]

To the north-east of the town 250 li, entering on a great mountain region, we come to the fountain of the Nâga A-po-lo-lo (Apalâla), which in fact is the upper source of the river Suvâstu It flows to the south-west

This land is very cold Even during spring and summer there are frequent frosts, morning and evening, and flying snow-storms, with pelting rain and snow fancifully commingled, reflecting the five colours like confused flowers

Thirty li or so south-west of the Nâga fountain on the north side of the river on the top of a large flat stone, there is a trace of Buddha's foot This trace appears long or short, according to the merit or prayers of the men who inspect it

In former days when Buddha subdued the nâga Apalâla, he came to this spot and left this trace as a fortunate indication

Following down the stream thirty li or so, we come to the washing-garment stone of Tathâgata (i e the stone on which he washed his robe) The marks of the flowery tracery of the Kashâya garment are plainly seen

To the south of the town 400 li or so, we come to Mount Hi-lo. Here Tathâgata in former days, hearing a half-gâtha, in gratitude to the Yaksha, threw his body

[1] Probably the same as Mankalai, Lat 34° 50′ N , Long 71° 50′ E , marked on the Indian Survey Map No 4

[2] Julien's translation is here in error, i e, p 86

down (from a tree) for his use[1] [A gâtha consists of forty-two words Ch Ed The Si-yu-ki says thirty-two]

Fifty li to the west of the town of Mungali, after crossing a great river,[2] we came to a stûpa called Lu-hi-ta-ka (Rôhitaka, i e, red), it is about ten chang high (100 feet), and was built by Asôka-râja Here Tathâgata in former days being born as Maitribala râja, cut his body with a knife in charity to five Yakshas

To the north-east of the city thirty li or so, we come to a stone stûpa called "The Miraculous" (Adbhûta). It is about thirty feet high It was here that Buddha in olden days preached the law on behalf of Devas and men. After leaving the spot, this stûpa rose out of the earth of its own accord

To the west of the stûpa, after crossing a great river and going three or four li, we come to a Vihâra, in which is a figure of Avalôkiteśvara Bodhisattva, which is possessed of exceedingly august spiritual qualities

To the north-east of the city, it is said that there are men, who, passing across mountains and valleys, following up (the river) in a contrary direction, along many mountain roads full of mud and dangerous defiles—sometimes passing across by iron chains and sometimes over flying bridges—going thus a thousand li or so,—come to the valley of Ta-li-lo (Dârîl) identical with the site of the old capital of U-chang-na (Udyâna)[3]

In this valley (ch'uen) is a large Sanghârâma, by the side of which is a carved wooden statue of Maitreya Bôdhisattva, of a golden colour and very majestic in appearance It is about 100 feet in height, and was made by the Arhat Madhyântika By his power of divine locomotion he enabled an artist to ascend to the Tuśita heaven, and caused him to observe personally the characteristic marks

[1] Records Vol i p 124
[2] Viz the Kumari River
[3] In this passage the introduction of the phrase "there are men &c" is probably an error The symbol for "a thousand," is also imperfect

(of Maitreya's body) After going there three times, the meritorious work was finished

Going south from the town of U-to-kia-han cha, we cross the Sin-tu river, which is here three or four li in width Its stream is extremely clear and rapid Poisonous dragons and evil sprites dwell beneath this river in great numbers Those who cross this river carrying with them rare gems of India, or Sâlîras, the boat (in which they embark) is suddenly overwhelmed by the waves

Crossing the river we come to the country of Ta-ch'a-shi-lo (Takshaśilâ) To the north of this town, about twelve or thirteen li, there is a stûpa which was built by King Aśôka. It constantly emits a sacred light from its surface

In olden times when Tathâgata was practising the duties of a Bôdhisattva, he cut off his head in this place He was then king of a great country, and his name was Chandraprabha By so doing he aimed to acquire the supreme wisdom of Bôdhi, and this he did through a thousand births

By the side of the stûpa is a Sanghârâma, in old days Ku-mo-lo-to (Kumâralabdha) a master of the Sâutrântika school, composed in this place various śâstras

From this, going about 700 li in a south-easterly direction, we pass through the kingdom of Săng-ho-po-lo (Simhapura)

After leaving the northern borders of Takshasîla, and crossing the Sindhu river about 200 li to the south-east, we go through a great rocky pass (gate) This is the spot where in olden time the Mahâsattva as a Prince Royal, gave up his body to feed the seven cubs of the starving Wu-t'u (tiger cat, cf. Ôtu) [1]

The land here was originally dyed with the blood of the Royal Prince, and now it remains of the same colour; and the shrubs and trees partake of this hue.

[1] Vide Records, i. 146.

Again going from this in a south-easterly direction 500 li or so across the mountains, we come to the country of Wu-la-shi (Uraśa) Still going to the south-east, climbing precipitous passes and crossing iron bridges for 1000 li or so, we arrive at the country of Kaśmîr.

The capital of this country on the west borders on the Great River There are 100 religious foundations in it, and about 5000 priests Moreover, there are four stûpas of wonderful height and great magnificence these were built by Aśôka-râja. Each of them has about one measure of the śarîras of Tathâgata

When the Master of the Law first arrived at the borders (of this kingdom), he entered it by the stone gates, the western entrance of the kingdom. The king sent his mother and younger brother with chariots and horses to escort him Having entered the stone gates, he visited successively the Sanghârâmas and offered his adorations, then coming to a temple he passed the night there The name of the temple was U-sse-kia-lo (Hushkara)[1]

That night the priests saw a vision in their sleep, a divine being said to them "This stranger-priest is come from Mahâ-China, he wishes to study the sacred books, and to adore the sacred traces in India"

The Masters said in humble reply "We have not yet heard of this man."

"This man who has come (from afar) to seek after the Law," he added, "is surrounded by numberless good spirits, who follow him everywhere Such a man is now in your midst—resting for the night The merit which attaches to attention paid to distant visitors is very great. You ought now therefore to be diligently reciting the Scriptures, and exciting in him a spirit of praise Why, then, are ye idle in these duties and plunged in sleep?"

[1] So restored by Julien, in loc.

The priests hearing these words awoke, and moving about, or sitting in meditation, recited the Scriptures, till morning—and then coming together they related the incident of the vision one to another, and applied themselves more earnestly to their devotions

Thus they continued for several days, after which the Master gradually approached the capital, when distant from about it one li he reached the preaching-hall (Dharmasâla) Then the king, with his assembled ministers and all the priests belonging to the capital, advanced to the preaching-hall, and escorted him onwards, being altogether something like a thousand men, with standards and parasols, with incense and flowers filling the roads When they met (the Master) they all performed a humble salutation and spread before him countless flowers as religious offerings This done, he was invited to mount a large elephant—and thus escorted, he approached the capital

They stopped at the Che-ye-in-to-lo convent (Jayendra)

On the morrow the king besought him to enter his palace and receive his religious offerings, he also ordered several tens of the most distinguished priests (to attend on this occasion). The repast ended, the king invited them to open the conference, and requested the Master to discuss difficult (parts of the doctrine)

Observing his readiness (joy), and finding that having come from far, fired by a desire to learn, he had no original texts from whence to read—(the king) gave him twenty men to copy the Sacred Books and Sâstras; moreover, he ordered five men to wait on him and obey his orders, and to furnish him, free of expense, with whatever things he required.

The chief of the priests of that establishment was a man of high moral character He observed with the greatest strictness the religious rules and ordinances He was possessed of the highest intelligence, and acquainted with all the points of a true disciple His talents were eminent; his spiritual powers exalted, and his disposition affectionate Thus he was pleased to invite the illustrious stranger and to honour him as a guest The Master of the Law likewise with all his heart respectfully questioned him, and night and day begged him ceaselessly to explain and give into his keeping the various Śâstras

That eminent man was about seventy years of age—his natural forces were somewhat abated—but having had the fortune to meet with a vessel of divine power (i e Hiuen-Tsiang) he used his utmost efforts to rouse himself (to the task of explication) Before noon he explained the Kosha śâstra After noon he explained the Nyâya-anusâra śâstra—after the first watch of the night he explained the Hêtuvidyâ śâstra On these occasions all the learned men within the borders (of the kingdom), without exception, flocked together (to hear the discourse) The Master of the Law, following the words of his teacher, grasped thoroughly the entire subject—he penetrated all the obscure passages and their sacred mysteries, completely

So that eminent man was immeasurably overjoyed and spake to the body of priests in these words, "This priest of China possesses wonderful (vast and immeasurable) strength of wisdom In all this congregation there is none to surpass him By his wisdom and his virtue he is competent to join in succession to the fame of the brother of Vasubandhu (i e Asañgha Bodhisattva) What a subject for regret, indeed! that belonging to a distant land he cannot at once form a part in the bequeathed fragrance of the saints and sages!"

Then there was in the congregation certain priests versed in the doctrine of the Great Vehicle—viz, Pi-shu-to-sang-ho (Visuddhasimha), Chin-na-fan-tu (Jinabandhu); and of the Sarvâstavâdin school, the following Su-kia-mi-to-lo (Sugatamitra), Po-su-mi-to-lo (Vasumitra), and of the school of the Mahâsañghikas, the following. Su-li-ye-ti-po (Sûryadeva), Chin-na-ta-lo-to (Jinatrâta).

This country from remote times was distinguished for learning, and these priests were all of high religious merit and conspicuous virtue, as well as of marked talent, and power of clear exposition of doctrine, and though the other priests (i e of other nations) were in their own way distinguished, yet they could not be compared with these—so different were they from the ordinary class

When they first encountered the Master of the Law, because he was filled with enthusiasm for the great Masters, they did not cease to propose difficult questions, to catch him The Master of the Law, with clear sight and unembarrassed language, answered them with no hesitation

From this time forth the sages were abashed in his presence.

This country was formerly a Nâga's lake Fifty years after the Nirvâna of Buddha, Madhyântika, a disciple of Ânanda, converted the dragon-king Quitting his lake he founded 500 Saṅghârâmas, and invited sages and saints to come and dwell there, and receive the religious offerings of the Nâgas

After this, Kanishka, king of Gandhâra, in the four hundredth year from the Nirvâna of Tathâgata, at the request of Parśvika, convoked an assembly of saintly men, who were conversant with the esoteric doctrine of the three Pitakas, and had investigated the exoteric doctrine of the five vidyâs [1]

Thus 499 men came together, and these, with the venerable Vasumitra, composed 500 The saints and sages then assembled, and recited connectedly the three pitakas

First they composed, in ten myriad stanzas, the Upadêsha-sâstra, to explain the Sûtra pitaka.

[1] The text is here defective

Next in ten myriad stanzas they composed the Vinaya-vibâshâ-sâstra, to explain the Vinaya

Next they composed, in ten myriad verses, the Abhidhama-Vibâshâ-sâstra

Altogether they composed thirty myriad of verses consisting of ninety-six myriad words.

The king ordered these Śâstras to be engraved on sheets of copper, which he enclosed in a stone chest, sealed and inscribed Then he built a great stûpa and placed the chest within it, commanding the Yaksha spirits to protect and defend it

The increased light thrown on the very mysterious doctrines of religion, is the result (force) of this (conduct).

Thus having halted here, first and last, for two years, and having studied the Sûtras and Śâstras, and paid reverence to the sacred traces, the Master took his leave

Proceeding in a south-westerly direction, he crossed mountains and streams, and going 700 li, he came to the kingdom of Pun-nu-tso (Punach)

Thence going east 400 li or so, he came to Ho-lo-she-pu-lo (Râjapurî)

From this, going south-east down the mountains and crossing the river, after 700[1] li or so, he came to the kingdom of Tseh-kia (Ṭakka)

From Lan-po (Lamghan) till arriving in this territory, the common people (being residents in a frontier country of a wild character), differ to some degree in their manners, clothing, and language, from India, having the customs of outlying and scattered districts

Going from the country of Râjapurî, after two days they crossed the Chandrabhâga[2] river, and came to the town of Che-ye-pu-lo (Jayapura), where they lodged for the night in a temple belonging to the heretics. This temple was outside the western gate of the town, and at this time contained about twenty disciples[1] The day after the morrow, they reached the town of Che kia-lo (Śákala) In this town is a Sanghârâma with about a hundred priests In the old days Vasubandhu Bodhisattva here composed the treatise Shing-i-tai-lun[2] By the side of the convent is a stûpa, about 200 feet high This is the spot where in former times the four Buddhas preached the law They bequeathed traces of their footsteps as they walked to and fro which are still visible

[1] Julien has, by mistake, 200 li. [2] The Chenâb.

Leaving this place he arrived at a great forest of Po-lo-che trees (Palâśas), just to the eastward of the town of Na-lo-săng-ho (Nárasimha) In the forest he encountered a band of fifty robbers These men, having taken the clothes and goods of the Master of the Law and his companions, without leaving anything, then pursued them, sword in hand, till they reached a dried-up marsh, ready to slay them all This marsh was covered with a tangled mass of prickly, matted creepers The Master of the Law and the Śrâmaneras who accompanied him, looking eagerly through the interstices of the wood, saw on the southern side of the marsh a water-course wide and deep enough to contain several men Having privately told the Master of this, he and they together passed through it, and coming out on the south-east side, they ran as quickly as they could for two or three li, when they met a Brahman at work ploughing the land

When they told this man about the robbers he was very much frightened, and immediately unyoked his oxen, and went with the Master to the village Here he assembled the people by blowing the conch and beating of drums When he had got about eighty men, each taking what weapon he could, they went in haste to the place where the robbers were The robbers seeing the crowd of men, quickly dispersed and entered the forest

[1] The original is ambiguous it may refer to the number of the company with whom Hiuen Tsiang travelled [2] Cf No. 1193, Nanj B 's Cat

The Master of the Law forthwith went towards the marsh and liberated the men who were bound, and all the people charitably divided their garments among them and conducted them to the village to pass the night

And now whilst the men were weeping and lamenting, the Master of the Law alone was smiling merrily (without sorrow) On this his companions asked him, and said: "The robbers have thoroughly despoiled us of our travelling robes and goods, and we have only just escaped with our lives Being beggared thus, our difficulties and dangers are at their extremest point When we reflect and think of the circumstances that occurred in the forest, we cannot but experience the greatest sorrow How is it that the Master alone does not share in our sorrow, but is able to keep a smile on his face?"

Answering, he said "The greatest gift which living creatures possess, is life If life is safe, what need we care about the rest? So in the current books of my country it is said 'The great treasure of heaven and earth is life,[1] whilst life lasts, so long let the great treasure be prized! A few garments and a few goods, why care for these so much?"

From these remarks his companions understood fully that as the turbulent waves of a river do not disturb its pure water beneath, so was he.

On the morrow he arrived at the eastern frontiers of the kingdom of Tcheka (Ṭakka) and entered a great city[2]

On the west of the city on the north side of the road, there is a great forest of An-lo (Âmra) trees, in this forest dwelt a Brâhman of 700 years (sic),[3] who in appearance was but about thirty years old His form and complexion were perfect (of the first class) His understanding was of a divine character his reasoning powers, superabundant He had thoroughly investigated the chung

[1] Cf St Matth vi 25
[2] Probably Lahore.
[3] Probably for 170.

and pih śâstras (the Prânyamula and the Śataśâstra), he was eminent in the study of the Vedas, and other books He had two followers, each of whom was aged 100 years or more When he had an interview with the Master of the Law he was overjoyed in affording him hospitality, and when he heard of the adventure with the robbers he sent one of his servants to tell the people of the town, who were Buddhists, to prepare food for the Master of the Law In this town there were several thousand dwellings, a few of the people were believers in Buddha, but most of them were heretics (sacrificing heretics)

Whilst in the country of Kaśmir, the renown of the Master of the Law had been noised abroad, and the neighbouring countries all knew of it the messenger, therefore, from the Brâhman, came to the neighbouring city, and announced as follows "The priest from China has come to our neighbourhood, and robbers have spoiled him of his clothes and effects now then let all who hear me understand that this is an opportunity for adding to the amount of their religious merit"

In consequence of this address of the messenger, all hostile religious feeling was laid aside, and some 300 persons of distinction, having heard the circumstances, came together and brought a length of cotton stuff and provisions for eating and drinking, which they respectfully presented to him, placing them before him with extreme humility and reverence

The Master of the Law, after repeating certain forms of prayer (incantations), further proceeded to declare the doctrine of rewards and punishments, as a consequence of present conduct In consequence of this the men arrived at a knowledge of truth and gave up their erroneous doctrine and returned to right reason Thus with joyous words and light heart they held their intercourse with the Master and returned

The aged (Brahman) was overjoyed at this wonderful event Meanwhile the Master divided the cotton stuff

among the different persons of the company, each person receiving several pieces for making garments, and when there was still some left, he presented five pieces (to the Brahman) in addition

Here he remained for one month studying the Sûtras, the Peh-lun (Śata-śâstra), the Kwang-peh-lun (Śata-śâstra vâipulyam) The author of this work (i e Deva Bôdhisattva) was a disciple of Nâgârjuna, who himself having received the doctrines of his master, expounded them with clearness

From this place going 500 li to the east, he arrived at the kingdom of Chi-na-po-tai (Chînapati), and took up his quarters in the convent called Tu-she-sa-na (?). Here there was a renowned priest named Pi-ni-to-poh-la-pó (Vinitaprabha) He was of a good reputation and had mastered the three pitakas He had himself composed a commentary on the Pañchaskhanda Śâstra, and on the Vidyâmâtrasiddhi-Trîdaśaśâstra

On this account the Master remained there fourteen months He studied the Abhidharma Śâstra, the Abhidharma-prakarana-sâsana-Śâstra, the Nyâyadvâra-târaka Śâstra, and others

To the south-east of the capital, after going 50 li or so, we arrive at the Tâmasavana Sañghârâma, in this convent there are some 300 priests, who belong to the Sarvâstivâdina school

The thousand Buddhas of the Bhadra Kalpa, are to assemble in this place with both men and Devas, to preach the law to them.

In the 300th year after the Nirvâna of Śâkya Tathâgata, there lived a master of Śâstras called Kâtyâyana who composed in this place the Jnâna-prasthâna Śâstra.

From this, going north-east 140 or 150 li, we come to the kingdom of Jâlandhara [1] On entering this country the pilgrim went to the Nagaradhana convent, where there was an eminent priest called Chandravarma, who was thoroughly acquainted with the Tripitaka.

[1] Vide Records, I 170

On this account he rested here four months, studying the Prakarana-pâda-vibâshâ-Sâstra.

From this, going north-east after traversing precipitous mountain passes and going 700 li or so, he arrived at the kingdom of Kulûta.

From Kulûta, going about 700 li south across a mountain range and over a river, we arrive at the kingdom of She-to-tu-lu (Śatadru)

Going south-west from this kingdom about 800 li, we come to the kingdom of Po-li-ye-ta-lo (Pâriyâtra).

From this, going east about 500 li, we come to the kingdom of Mo-t'u-lo (Mathurâ)

There are Stûpas containing relics of the bodies of Sâkya Tathâgata and his holy disciples still existing in this place to wit, of Sâriputra, of Maudgalyâyana, of Purnamâitreyânîputra, of Upâli, of Ânanda, of Râhula, and of Mañjus'ri

Every year, on religious festival days, priests and disciples assemble at these several stûpas, according to their school, and offer religious worship and offerings

The followers of the Abhidharma offer to Sâriputra; the Quietists (those who practice meditation) offer to Maudgalyâyana, the students of the Sûtras offer to Purnamâitreyânîputra, the followers of the Vinaya offer to Upâli, the Bhikshunis offer to Ananda, the Srâmaneras offer to Râhula, the followers of the Great Vehicle offer to the Bôdhisattvas.

Five or six li to the east of the city there is a mountain Sañghârâma which was founded by the venerable Upagupta there are herein relics of his nails and hair

In a precipice to the north of the Sanghârâma there is a stone house about twenty feet high and thirty feet wide Within this cave there are heaped up a number of bamboo splints, about four inches long The venerable Upagupta,[1] when he preached the law and led a husband and wife to the attainment of the fruit of Arhatship, for each one so converted deposited in this cave one bamboo slip but as to others (not so related) although they attained the fruit, he did not record their conversion

Going north-east from this about 500 li, we come to Sa-ta-ni-shi-fa-lo (Sthânêśvara) Still going east about 400 li we come to Lu-le-na (Srughna ?)[2]

On the east this kingdom borders on the river Ganges, on the north it abuts on a great mountain (range), through its centre flows the river Yamunâ (Jumnâ)

Going about 800 li to the east of this river we come to the source of the river Ganges This head-stream is about three or four li in width, it flows south-east, and where it enters the sea it is about ten li in width. Its waters are sweet and soft to the taste, and the stream carries with it sands of extreme fineness. The ordinary books of the country speak of it as the "blessed River," those who bathe in it are cleansed from sin, those who drink its waters, or even rinse their mouth therefrom, escape from all dangers and calamities, and when they die forthwith are born in heaven, and enjoy happiness

So the common folk, men and women, are always congregating on the banks of the river But this is merely the heretical belief of the district, and is not true. In after times, when Dêva Bôdhisattva showed them the right meaning of all this, then the erroneous belief began to disappear

There was a renowned priest in this kingdom named Jayagupta, who had well studied the Tripitaka The Master of the Law therefore remained here one winter

[1] Upagupta, so celebrated in the Northern Legends, is unknown in the Pâli Records This shows the radical character of the separation of the Buddhist community after the Council of Vâiśâli

[2] As M Julien observes, we must substitute Su lu kin-na for the symbols given in the text vide Records, i 186.

and half the spring season, and heard him explain the Vibhâshâ according to the school of the Saûtrântikas

After this he crossed to the eastern bank of the river and came to the kingdom of Matipura.

The king of this country is of the caste of Sûdras There are some ten Sanghârâmas and about eight hundred priests here They study the Little Vehicle, according to the school of the Sarvâstivâdins To the south of the capital four or five li, there is a little Sanghârâma with about fifty priests in it, it was here that Gunaprabha of old composed the Pin-chin[1] and other Śâstras, amounting to about one hundred in all This doctor was originally a native of Parvata, and was a student of the Great Vehicle, but afterwards he became attached to the Little Vehicle

At this time the Arhat Dêvasêna had visited the Tushita heaven Then Gunaprabha wished to see Maitrêya to dispel some doubts, which hindered his religious progress He therefore asked Dêvasêna to transport him by his spiritual power to the courts of that heaven; having looked upon Maitrêya he saluted him without prostrating himself "I am a religious mendicant (he thought) in full orders, Maitrêya occupies this heaven like a layman, it is not becoming that I should prostrate myself in worship before him"

And so he came and went three times, but rendered him no homage He was puffed up by self-conceit and got no explanation of his doubts[2]

Three or four li to the south of the Sanghârâma of Gunaprabha, there is a Sanghârâma with about two hundred priests, who also study the Little Vehicle It was here the Doctor of Śâstras called Saṅghabhadra ended the years of his life This doctor was originally a native of Kaśmir. He was a man of distinguished learning and great talents He thoroughly understood the Vibhâshâ of the Sarvâstivâdin school.

[1] Vide Records, vol i p 191, n

[2] Vide the whole of this story, Records, i 192

At this time Vasubandhu Bôdhisattva had also distinguished himself for his profound learning He had already composed the Abhidharma-Kosha-Śâstra to confute the professors of the Vibhâshâ His deep reasoning and ornate style were the admiration of all Western students The very spirits and demons also studied and followed his teaching.

From the time of Sanghabhadra's appearance (as an author), his mind had become full of impatient desire

After twelve years of extended reflection he composed the Kôsha-karikâ-śâstra, in 25,000 ślôkas, and eighty myriad words Having finished it, he longed for an interview with Vasubandhu, to settle the truth or falsehood of his points But he died without attaining this object Afterwards Vasubandhu saw the treatise, and loudly praised its wise comments, and said "The force of the thoughts herein contained is not inferior to that of the followers of the Vibhâshâ school Nevertheless, as its leading principles are entirely in agreement with my own, let it be named the Nyâyânusâra Śâstra," accordingly it was so done, in agreement with this opinion

After Saṅghabhadra's death they erected to his memory a stûpa in an Âmra grove, that still remains, by the side of this grove there is a stûpa which contains the relics of Vimalamitra, a Doctor of Śâstras. This doctor was a native of the country of Kaśmir, he belonged to the school of the Sarvâstavâdins, and had travelled through the five Indias, and was deeply versed in the Tripitakas

Being about to return to his own country, as he passed on his way by the stûpa of Saṅghabhadra, he was deeply affected to think that the undertaking of this doctor had not been matured and published before his death; and so, moved by the thought, he took an oath that he would himself compose such treatises as would overcome the principles of the Great Vehicle, and put out the name of Vasubandhu; and so he thought to perpetuate for ever the fame of the Doctor (Sanghabhadra).

After having said this, his intellect became confused, his bowels and tongue protruded, and his blood burst forth over all his body[1] Then perceiving that the origin of his sufferings was from his perverse views, he tore up his writings and with deep contrition exhorted his disciples never to abuse the principles of the Great Vehicle, and so saying, he died Where he died the earth opened and there is a great ditch.

In this kingdom there was an eminent priest called Mitrasêna, ninety years of age He was a disciple of Gunaprabha and deeply versed in the Tripitakas The Master of the Law stopped with him half the spring and the summer following, studying the Tattvasatya śâstra, the Abhidharma-jnâna-prasthâna-śâstra, and others.

Proceeding northward from this 300 li or so, we come to the country of Po-lo-hi-mo-pu-lo (Brâhmapura), again south-east of this, going 400 li or so, we come to the kingdom of Hi-chi-ta-lo (Ahikshêtra).

Again, going south 200 li or so, we cross the Ganges, and then going south-west we arrive at the country of Pi-lo-na[2]-na (Vîrasana)

Again, going east 200 li or so, we come to the country of Kie-pi-tha (Kapitha)

About twenty li to the east of the city there is a Saṅghârâma, within the court of which there are three ladders composed of the precious substances;[3] they are placed (side by side) in a direction from south to north and face the east It was down one of these that Buddha of old descended from the Taryastriṁshas heaven, and returned to Jambudvîpa after preaching for the sake of his queen-mother Mâya[4] The middle ladder is of gold,

[1] Records, i 197

[2] Na for shan. Records, i. 201

[3] Literally, "three precious ladders"

[4] In Legge's translation of Fâ-hien, p. 43 n 2, the author speaks of Mâya being re-born in the Tuśita heaven, adopting an error of Eitel's, which he had corrected.

the one on the left of crystal, the one on the right of silver Tathâgata, leaving the Saddharma Hall,[1] accompanied by the congregation of Dêvas, descended by the middle ladder, Mahâbrâhma, with a white chowrie in his hand, descended by the silver ladder on the right, whilst on the left Śakradeva, with a precious parasol, came down by the crystal ladder[2]

At this time a 100,000 dêvas and the great Bôdhisattvas followed him in his descent

Several centuries ago these ladders existed in their integrity, but at the present time they have disappeared (been swallowed up) Kings who came afterwards, from a principle of affection and respect, have reconstructed the foundations of these ladders with stone and brick, ornamented with various gems, to a height of about seventy feet, and over this they have erected a Vihâra, in which is placed a figure of Buddha in stone[3] On the right and left of this statue are the figures of Brâhma and Śakra, very glorious in appearance and just as in the original. At the side is a stone pillar in height seventy feet, placed there by Aśôka-râja

Near this is a stone foundation (raised path) fifty paces or so in length, and seven feet high, this is the spot where Buddha formerly paced to and fro.

From this going north-west 200 li, we come to Kie-jo-kio-she-kwo (Kanauj)

This kingdom is four thousand li in circuit; the capital borders on the Ganges on the West; it is about twenty li in length, and five or six li across.

There are about 100 Sanghârâmas and 10,000 priests.

[1] That is, the preaching hall of Śâkra

[2] Vide Records, i 203

[3] Julien translates, "in the middle of which is placed," &c This is correct enough, and shows that the symbol tang in Fâ-hien (cap 17), referring to this story, ought to be translated "facing" or "opposite to" the middle ladder, &c.

The priests study the Great and Small Vehicle promiscuously.

The king is a Bais Rajput.[1] His name is Harshavardhana, his father's name was Prakaravardhana,[2] his senior brother was called Râjyavardhana Harshavardhana, the present king, is virtuous and patriotic, all people celebrate his praises in songs.

At the time (when Râjyavardhana was on the throne) the king of Karna-survarna, in Eastern India, whose name was Śasaṅka-râja, hating the superior military talents of this king, made a plot and murdered him.

Then the great minister Bhani[3] and the subordinate officers, afflicted to see the people without a ruler, agreed to place on the throne his younger brother Śilâditya.[4] His royal appearance and demeanour were recognised, in conjunction with his vast military talents His qualifications moved heaven and earth, his sense of justice was admired by Dêvas and men He was soon able to avenge the injuries received by his brother, and to make himself master of India His renown was spread abroad everywhere, and all his subjects reverenced his virtues The empire having gained rest, then the people were at peace.

On this he put an end to warlike expeditions, and began to store up in the magazines, the lances and swords He gave himself up to religious duties, he prohibited the slaughter of any living creature He himself set the example, and ordered all his people to abstain from flesh meat, and he founded Sanghârâmas wherever there were sacred traces of religion.

Yearly during three or seven days (or, perhaps, during three seven-days, i e. three weeks) he provided food for the whole body of priests.

Every fifth year he convoked a grand assembly of deliverance (Mahâ-môksha-parishad), and distributed the

[1] Vide Records, i 209, n 12

[2] For Prabhâkaravarddhana.

[3] Vide Records, i. 210, n 18. He is also called Bhandi (Max Müller's India, p. 288)

[4] That is, Śilâditya Harshavardhana.

stores of his treasuries in charity. To describe all his conduct, would be but to tell again the deeds of Sudâna.[1]

To the north-west of the city is a Stûpa about 200 feet high.

Six or seven li to the south-east, south of the river Ganges, is a Stûpa also about 200 feet high Both were built by Aśôka-râja, in places where Buddha had formerly preached the law.

When the Master entered the kingdom he went to the temple called Bhadra-Vihâra He stopped there three months, and under the direction of Viryasêna, a doctor of the three Pitakas, he read the Vibhâshâ of Buddhadâsa, which is called Varmavibhasha-vyâkarana[2]

[1] That is, Prince Visvântara, the hero of the Wessantara Jâtaka He must be distinguished from Sudatta, i e Anâthapindika This is plain from a comparison with Sung Yun's account (Records, I xcvii) Julien's note therefore (in loc) is in error

[2] I see no other way of translating this passage Julien seems to have had a different text The sentence in my original is, "Yueh (i e, viz) chan-pi-po-sha ki" Instead of yueh, Julien's text seems to have had Shing Concerning the Vibhâshâ composed by Buddhadâsa, vide Records, I 230

BOOK III.

From Ayôdhyâ to Hiranyaparvata.

FROM this, going 600 li or so to the south-east and crossing the Ganges, on the south of the river we come to the kingdom of 'O-yu-to (Ayôdhyâ) There are here about one hundred temples with several thousand priests, who study both the Small and the Great Vehicle

In the capital city is an old Sanghârâma Here the Bodhisattva Vasubandhu composed his treatises on the Great and Little Vehicle, and preached for the good of the community.

North-west of the city four or five li, and by the side of the river Ganges, is a great Sanghârâma, in which is a Stûpa about 200 feet high This was built by Aśôka râja on the spot where Buddha in old days delivered the Law for three months

By the side of this Stûpa is a spot where the four Buddhas of the past age walked for exercise

To the south-west of the city five or six li, is an old Sanghârâma, this is the place where Asañgha Bôdhisattva explained the Law The Bôdhisattva, during the night, ascended to the Tuśita heaven, and received from Mâitreya Bôdhisattva the Yôga-śâstra, the Alaṁkâra-Mahâyâna-śâstra, and the Madhyânta-vibhañgha-śâstra The next day he descended from the heaven, and declared the Law for the sake of the community.

Asañgha, who is also called Wu-cho, was a man of Gandhâra. He was born in the middle of the thousand years following the Nirvâna of Buddha,[1] and became a disciple in the school of the Mahîsâsakas Afterwards he joined the school of the Great Vehicle His brother, Vasubandhu, became a disciple in the school of the Sarvâstivâdins, but afterwards joined the Great Vehicle. Both these brothers were, in point of endowments, vessels full of wisdom and holiness Asañgha possessed vast ability in composition, and wrote many śâstras, in explanation of, and comment on, the Great Vehicle He was the principal composer of śâstras in India For example, he wrote the Mahâyâna-samparigraha-śâstra,[1] the Prakaranâryavâchâ-śâstra-kârikâ, the Abhidharma śâstra, the Vidyâmâtra-śâstra, the Kosha-śâstra, and others

[1] That is, the middle of "the period of images," beginning 500 years after the Nirvâna.

The Master of the Law left the kingdom of Ayôdhyâ, having paid reverence to the sacred traces, and following the course of the river Ganges, proceeded eastward, being on board a vessel with about eighty other fellow-passengers. He wished to reach the kingdom of 'O-ye-mu-khi (Hayamukha)[2] After going about a hundred li, both banks of the river were shrouded by the thick foliage of an Aśôka forest, and amid these trees on either bank were concealed some ten pirate boats Then these boats, propelled by oars, all at once burst forth into the mid-stream. Some of those in the ship, terrified at the sight, cast themselves into the river, whilst the pirates, taking the ship in tow, brought it to the bank. They then ordered the men to take off their clothes, and searched them in quest of jewels and precious stones.

Now these pirates pay worship to Dûrga, a spirit of heaven, and every year during the autumn, they look out for a man of good form and comely features, whom they kill, and offer his flesh and blood in sacrifice to their divinity, to procure good fortune. Seeing that the Master of the Law was suitable for their purpose, both in respect of his distinguished bearing and his bodily strength and appearance, they exchanged joyful glances, and said, "We were letting the season for sacrificing to our god pass by, because we could not find a suitable person for it, but now this Śramaṇa is of noble form and pleasing features—let us kill him as a sacrifice, and we shall gain certain good fortune"

[1] B. Nanj. Cat., No. 1202.
[2] Vide Records, &c., vol. i. p. 229.

The Master of the Law replied, "If this poor and defiled body of mine is indeed suitable for the purpose of the sacrifice you propose, I, in truth, dare not grudge (the offering), but as my intention in coming from a distance was to pay reverence to the image of Bôdhi and the Grîdhrakûta Mountain, and to inquire as to the character of the Sacred Books and the Law (or, the Law of the Sacred Books), and as this purpose has not yet been accomplished, if you, my noble benefactors (dânapatis) kill this body of mine, I fear it will bring you misfortune (instead of good fortune)"

Moreover, his fellow-passengers all, with one voice, asked them to spare him, and some even prayed to be allowed to die in his stead, but the pirates would not consent.

Then the captain of the gang despatched some men with water to arrange the ground, and to erect in the midst of the flowering grove an altar besmeared with mud He then commanded two of the company to take their drawn knives and to bind the Master of the Law upon the altar. And now, when they were about to use their knives for the purpose of sacrificing him, the Master of the Law showed no sign of fear in his face, insomuch that all the pirates were moved to astonishment.

When he saw there was no escape, however, he spoke to the pirates and begged them to allow him a little time and not to crowd round him painfully—but "let me," he said, "with a joyous mind, take my departure."

Then the Master of the Law, with an undivided mind

bent on the courts of Tuśita heaven, thought on the Bôdhisattva Mâitrêya, and earnestly prayed to be born in that place, that he might pay reverence and his religious offerings (to the Bôdhisattva), and receive from him the Yogâcharîya-bhûmi-śâstra, and listen to the sound of the excellent Law Then having perfected himself throughout in wisdom, "let me return (he prayed) and be born here below, that I may instruct and convert these men, and cause them to practise themselves in doing good and to give up their evil deeds, and thus by diffusing, far and wide, the benefits of religion, to give rest to all the world"

Then the Master of the Law, paying worship to the Buddhas of the ten regions, collected his mind into perfect composure, and sitting still, fixed his thoughts on Mâitrêya without any interruption Thus he seemed in his innermost thoughts as if he rose up above Mount Sumeru and successively ascending one, two, three heavens, he gazed upon the courts of Tuśita, the place of Mâitrêya, with its excellently precious adornments (galleries) and the multitude of devas surrounding him on every side. At this time his body and soul were ravished with joy, he knew nothing of the altar on which he was, he had no recollection of the robbers And now, whilst his fellow passengers gave way to cries and tears, suddenly a black tempest (typhoon) arose from the four quarters of heaven, smiting down the trees; clouds of sand flew on every side; and the lashing waves of the river tossed the boats to and fro. The robbers and their company, greatly terrified, asked the companions of the Master, "Whence comes this Śraman?—what is his name and title?" and so on. They, answering, said: "He comes from the country of China—he is the renowned person who is in search of the Law, if you, my masters, kill him, your guilt will be immeasurable, look now and see the winds and waves—these are but indications of the anger of the spirits of heaven: haste then to repent!"

The pirates then, filled with fear, urged each other to repentance and confession of their fault, then with bowed heads they made profound obeisance (or, they embraced the religion of Buddha) And now one of the robbers accidentally touching the Master of the Law with his hand (or, touching the hand of the Master of the Law), he opened his eyes and said to the robber, "Has the hour come?" The robber answered "We dare not hurt the Master! we pray you accept our repentance!" The Master then accepted their reverence and confession of faults, and then preached to them about the future punishment in Avîchi[1] of those who gave themselves up to murder, robbery, and impious sacrifices, and other evil deeds "How would you then risk the woes of the long-during asañkhêya of ages for the sake of this body of yours, which is but in point of time as the lightning flash or the dew of the morning?"

The robbers then bowed their heads and confessed their faults, saying "We indeed, individually, were perverted by a foolish tone of mind, and led to do what we ought not to do, and to sacrifice (pay religious rites) to what we ought not to sacrifice If we had not met with the Master—whose religious merit has moved even the mysterious powers of heaven—how should we ever have been led to repentance? And now we ask to give up from the present day these evil ways of ours, and we pray the Master to be witness to our sincerity!"

On this they each encouraged one another to deeds of amendment, and collecting their various instruments of robbery together, they cast them into the river, and whatever clothes or private property they had taken, they restored these to their rightful owners, and then they took on themselves the five obligations of a lay-believer.

Then the winds and the floods subsided, and the pirates were all overcome with joy, and bowed their heads in adoration His fellow voyagers, moreover, were filled with surprise and admiration more than ever, whilst those present and absent who heard of the event could not help exclaiming with wonder at the occurrence. "If it were not for the power of his high resolve in seeking for the Law, this could not have come to pass!"

[1] The lowest of the Buddhist hells.

From this, going east about 300 li, after crossing the Ganges to the north side, we come to 'O-ye-muh-khi (Hayamukha).

From this, going south-east 700 li or so, after crossing to the south side of the Ganges, on the north of the River Jumnâ, we come to the country of Prayâga

To the south-west of the town, in a grove of Champaka flowers, there is a stûpa built by Aśôka-râja. This is the spot where in old days Buddha overcame the heretic (or, heretics) By the side of it is a Sanghârâma Here Dêva Bôdhisattva composed the enlarged Śata-śâstra and vanquished the heretics of the Little Vehicle. To the east of the capital is the spot where the two rivers join, and to the west of this point is a level plain about fourteen or fifteen li in circuit The ground is perfectly level and straight. From ancient days till now, royal and noble personages endowed with virtue and love, in the distribution of their charitable offerings, have all resorted to this spot for the purpose, and hence the name of the Field of Great Beneficence has been given to it. At the present time Śilâditya râja, following this custom, has distributed here the accumulated wealth of five years, during a period of seventy-five days From the three precious objects (Buddha, Dharma, Samgha), down to the poorest orphan, there is no one but has shared in his bounty.

From this, in a south-west direction, we enter a great forest, in which we frequently encounter evil beasts and wild elephants After going 500[1] li or so, we arrive at Kiau-shang-mi (Kauśâmbî).

There are about ten Saṅghârâmas here, with some 300 priests Within the city is an old (or, ruined) palace (i e palace-precinct), in which is a large Vihâra about sixty feet high, in which is a sandal-wood figure of Buddha, surmounted by a stone canopy, made by King Udâyana

In old times Tathâgata dwelt during an entire season of Rest in the Trayâstrimshas heaven, for the purpose of preaching to his mother The king, thinking of him with affection, requested Mâudgalyâyana to transport a clever sculptor to this heaven, who might observe the honourable features and figure of Buddha, and on his return might carve from sandal-wood a true likeness of his appearance

When the Lord of the World came down again, this was the figure which arose to meet him

South of this is a ruined dwelling, the old house of the nobleman[2] Gośira.

Not far south of the city is an old Sanghârâma, which was built on the garden-site of this nobleman In it is a stûpa, about 200 feet high, which was raised by Aśôka-râja

Again, south-east of this, is a double-storeyed tower, where Vasubandhu composed the Vidyâmâtra-siddhi-śâstra.

Again, to the east, is an Âmra grove, in which are some old foundation stones[3] This is where Asaṅgha Bôdhisattva composed the Prakaranâryavâchâ-śâstra-kârikâ[4]

Going about 500 li from this, we come to the kingdom

[1] In my translation of the Si yu ki, p 234, I have, by mistake, said that Hwui-lih (i e the present work) states the distance as 50 li

[2] Chang-ché.

[3] Ku-ki. This expression is constantly used by Hiuen Tsiang where Fa-hien only uses the symbol ku, showing plainly enough that Fa-hien would denote that the buildings he refers to are in ruins Julien also translates ku by ruins, Jul. i. 122, l 11 of Pi-so-kia (Viśâkhâ). It has about twenty Sanghârâmas and some 3000 priests, belonging to the Sammatîya school of the Little Vehicle.

[4] N B., 1202

On the left-hand side of the road which goes south-east is a great Sanghârâma. This is where in old days the Arhat Devaśarman composed the Vijñâna-kâya-pâda-śâstra, which affirms the non-existence of "self," or, of (individual) man Here also the Arhat Gôpa composed the śâstra Shing-Kiau-in-Shih, which affirmed the existence of "self," and of "(individual) man." These views of religious doctrine led to many wrangling treatises

Here also is the place where Dharmapâla Bôdhisattva during seven days overthrew a hundred writers of śâstras belonging to the Little Vehicle By the side of this spot is the place where Tathâgata during six years preached the Law.

There is a tree here about seventy feet high Here in former days Buddha, having cleaned his teeth, flung the fragments of the wood on the ground. Immediately they took root, and the umbrageous tree which grew up remains there till now The followers of heretical views often came to destroy it, but as often as they cut it down it grew up again as flourishing and verdant as at first

Going north-east from this 500 li or so, we arrive at the kingdom of Shi-lo-fu-shi-ti (Śrâvastî). It is about 6000 li in circuit and has several hundred Sanghârâmas and several thousand priests,[1] all of whom belong to the Sammatiya school. The capital of this country was where King Prasênajita dwelt when Buddha was alive

Within the city there are the old ruins (ku ki) of the king's palace.

Not far east from this is a stûpa erected on some old foundations, this was the spot where stood a great

[1] This seems to contradict the account found in the Si-yu ki Records (II 2), unless the symbol "sho" be taken as a verb, the passage would then read, "the Sanghârâmas amount to 100 and the disciples amount to 1000.

preaching hall erected by King Prasênajita for Buddha's use.

Next we see a tower, this was where stood the Vihâra of Prajâpati Bhikshunî, the elder maternal aunt of Buddha

East of this again is a tower, this marks the spot of the ruined house[1] of Sudatta By the side of the house is a great stûpa, this is where the Añgulimâlya gave up his evil design (or, heresy)

Five or six li to the south of the city is the grove of Jeta, the same as "the garden of the Friend of the orphans and desolate" There was formerly a Sanghârâma here, but now it has been overturned and destroyed.

On the right and left side of the eastern gate[2] there have been built stone pillars about seventy feet high These were placed there by Aśôka râja All the rooms are completely destroyed except one little stone chamber in which there is a golden figure This figure was made by King Prasênajita when Buddha in old days ascended to the Trayastrimshas heaven to preach for his mother's sake The king's heart being deeply affected, and hearing that King Udâyana had caused a sandal-wood figure to be made, he, on that account, made this one.

Behind the convent, not far, is where the Brahmachârî heretic killed the woman and accused Buddha of the murder[3]

To the east of the convent about 100 paces is a great chasm, this is where Devadatta went down alive into hell after trying to poison Buddha. To the south of this, again, is a great ditch, this is the place where the Bhikshu Kukâlî went down alive into hell after slandering Buddha. To the south of this, about 800 paces, is the place where

[1] I might perhaps say "ruinous house," but the whole context shows that ku has the sense of what we should call dilapidated

[2] That is, of the "entrance gate" or "principal door," it is difficult to know what Dr Legge means in his translation of Fa-hien, when he says, "on each side of the door, when open, there was a stone pillar" (o. c., p 56) Were the pillars not there when the door was shut?

[3] I have no doubt that the woman Sundarî was killed, and not that she killed another.

the Brahman woman Chañścha went down alive into hell after slandering Buddha. All these chasms are without any visible bottom (are bottomless pits).

To the eastward of the Sanghârâma about seventy paces is a Vihâra-Sanghârâma, lofty and large, in which is a sitting figure of Buddha facing the east This is the place where in old times Buddha disputed with all the heretics.

To the east of this, again, is a Dêva temple equal in size to the Vihâra, when the sun's rays move in the direction of these buildings—the shadow of the Dêva temple does not reach the Vihâra, but the shadow of the Vihâra always enshrouds the temple

East from this three or four li, is a Stûpa, this is the place where Śâriputra discussed with the heretics.

North-west of the capital city sixty li or so, is an old (ruinous) city This was the town of the father of Kâśyapa Buddha, who lived during the Bhadra Kalpa when men's lives reached to 20,000 years

To the south of the city is the place where (this) Buddha first saw his father after having arrived at perfect enlightenment

To the north of the city is a tower This tower contains the relics of the entire body of Kâśyapa Buddha. All these were founded by Aśôka-râja.

From this, going south-east about 800 li, we come to the kingdom of Kapilavastu. This country is about 4000 li in circuit, the capital, as well as some 1000 villages, are all waste and ruined The inner city is fifteen li round; it is completely encircled and is exceedingly strong[1]

Within the city are some old foundations (ku ki)[2]

[1] But probably there is a mistake in the text, and it should be "it is built of bricks and is," &c

[2] In this and all the following cases the ruined condition of the buildings is denoted in Fâ hien by the symbol "ku."

belonging to the chief palace of Suddhôdana râja Over these ruins a Vihâra has been built in which is a figure of the king

To the north of this, again, are some old foundations; these belong to the sleeping hall of Queen Mâya Over this site is built a Vihâra, in which is a figure of the queen By the side of this is a Vihâra, this is where Sâkya Bôdhisattva descended as a spirit,[1] into the womb of his mother. In it is placed a picture of Bôdhisattva descending to be born.

The Sthavira school says that this took place on the 30th day of the month U-tan-lo-'an-sha-cha (Uttarâshâdha), descending as a spirit into his mother's womb on that evening. This would be the 15th day of the fifth month (with us). The other schools fix the 23rd day of the month, which would correspond with the 8th day of the fifth month (with us)

To the north-east of this is a Stûpa, this is the spot where the Rishi Asita took the horoscope of the prince royal

On the left and right of the city is the place where the royal prince contended in athletic sports with the Śâkyas

Again there is the place where the royal prince left the city on horseback (i e when he gave up his secular life),

And there are the places where he turned back in his chariot, having first seen outside the four gates, the old man, the sick man, the dead man, and the Śraman, who had given up the world from disgust.

[1] Julien translates the passage as though "shin" referred to Mâya, and he makes the expression equal to "his divine mother." But this has no authority, and is expressly contradicted in the Si yu ki (K vi, fol 9 a col 2 and col 5), where it is said "the picture of the descent as a spirit" (there being no mention of Mâya) is on the wall of the palace (cf v 4 Kiuen I of the Buddhacharita) This leads me to observe that the descent of Buddha as a spirit, does not mean that he descended in the shape of an elephant, but that he was riding on an elephant, but being a spirit was invisible Vide the Chinese picture in Legge's Fâ-hien, p. 65.

From this, going through a wild forest about 500 li east, we come to the country of Râma (Râmagirâma). This country has but few houses or inhabitants.

To the east of the old city is a brick Stûpa about 100 feet high. After the Nirvâna of Tathâgata the old king of this country, having obtained a share of the relics (Śarîras), returned home and built this stûpa It constantly emits rays of glory

By the side of it is a Nâga tank The Nâga frequently changes his appearance into that of a man, and as such encircles the tower in the practice of religion (i e turning religiously with his right hand towards the tower) Wild elephants, with flowers held in their trunks, constantly come to offer their religious offerings

Close by the side of this Stûpa is a Sanghârâma of which a Śrâmanêra is the subdirector (Karmadâna) [1] The tradition is this .—There was formerly a Bhikshu who had induced some fellow-disciples to travel afield to pay reverence (to the sacred spots) Then they saw the wild elephants, carrying flowers in their trunks, lay them down before this tower And again they saw them dig up the herbage with their tusks, and in their trunks bring water for sprinkling, the company seeing this were astonished and affected with emotion.

There was one Bhikshu in the company who resolved to give up the great rules of moral obligation, and remain there on the spot to render his religious offerings (at the shrine) Speaking to the others, he said "The wild elephants, beast born as they are, know how to reverence this sacred tower, they gather flowers, and sprinkle water, and sweep! How then can we, belonging to the human race and devotees of Buddha, behold this desert spot and not render our religious assistance!"

So taking leave of his companions he remained there. He constructed a dwelling-place, cleared the land, and planted flowers, and cultivated fruits: he let not a moment pass in idleness, either during winter or summer.

[1] 士 for 事

The people of the neighbouring countries, hearing of him, all contributed of their wealth and valuables to construct therewith a Sanghârâma, and they besought this priest to take the direction of the establishment as steward From this time through successive generations things have been managed according to this old plan

Going about 100 li to the eastward of the Śrâmanêra convent through a great forest, we find a Stûpa built by Aśôka-râja It was here that the prince royal, having passed through the city, and reaching this spot, took off his ornaments and clothes and the hair jewel of his sacred tiara, and gave them to Chandaka Both here and where he cut off his hair there are commemorative towers.

Having left the forest we come to the kingdom of Ku-shi-na-k'ie-lo[1] This place is altogether desert and waste

Within the city at the north-east angle is a Stûpa built by Aśôka-rajâ on the site of the old house of Chunda In the house is a well which was dug when he was about to make his religious offering. The water of this well is still sweet and clear.

Three or four li to the north-west of the town we cross the 'O-shi-to-fa-tai (Ajitavatî) river Not far from the bank of the river we come to a Śâla grove. This tree resembles the Ho only its bark is a greenish-blue, and its leaves white, and very shining and lustrous There are four trees in pairs, of equal height, this is the place where Buddha died.

There is a great Vihâra here, built of bricks, within which is a figure of the Nirvâna of Tathâgata; his head is towards the north, and his appearance is as if he were asleep By the side of the Vihâra is a Stûpa about 200 feet high, constructed by Asôka râja There is, moreover, a stone column standing here, which records the circumstances of the Nirvâna of Buddha, but does not state the year or the month.

[1] Kuśinagara, vide Records, II 31

The current tradition relates that Buddha lived in the world eighty years, and that he entered Nirvâna the 15th day of the latter half of the month Vaiśâkha, which corresponds with the 15th day of the second month (with us) The school of the Sarvâstivâdins again say that Buddha entered Nirvâna during the second half of the month Kârtika This would correspond with the 8th day of the ninth month (with us)

Some say that 1200 years have passed since the Nirvâna others, 1500 years others, more than 900 years, but not yet the full period of 1000 years[1]

Again, there are towers erected where Tathâgata, sitting up in his golden coffin, preached on behalf of his mother, and stretching out his arms questioned Ânanda, and showed his feet to Kâśyapa; also where they burnt his body with scented wood, and the eight kings divided his bone-relics

Again, passing 500 li or so through a great forest, we come to the kingdom of Pó-lo-ni-sse (Bânâras)

This kingdom is about 4000 li in circuit The capital borders, on the west, on the river Ganges, it is about ten li in length, and five or six li in breadth

There are about thirty Saṅghârâmas, and 2000 priests who study the teaching of the Sarvâstivâdins, belonging to the Little Vehicle

Crossing the Pó-lo-ni-sse river (Varanâ), and going north-east ten li or so, we come to the Sanghârâma of the "Stag-desert" The lofty turrets (of the convent) mingle with the clouds, and the long galleries unite at the four corners of the building. There are about 1500 priests here, who study the Little Vehicle according to the Sammatîya school

Within the great court is a vihâra 100 feet high;

[1] Records, II 33 n 91

there are stone steps, and brick niches arranged in regular order round the storeys of the building, in each niche is a gilded figure of Buddha

Within the great hall (or house) is a figure of Buddha in brass (calamine stone),[1] of the actual size of Tathâgata's body, he is represented as turning the wheel of the law

To the south-east of the Vihâra is a stone Stûpa, erected by Aśôka-râja, about 100 feet high, in front of it is a stone column about 70 feet high This is the place where Buddha first began to preach By the side of it is the place where Mei-ta-li (Maitri) Bôdhisattva received the predictive assurance

Again to the west is a Stûpa, this is the place where Buddha in former days was born as Prabhâpâla Bôdhisattva [2] in the midst of the Bhadra Kalpa, when men lived to 20,000 years of age At this time Kâśyapa being Buddha, he received a predictive assurance here

To the south of this spot is a place where the four Buddhas of the past age walked to and fro In length this terrace is about 500 feet, and in height seven feet It is made of a greenish blue stone and bears on its surface the impression of the four Buddhas walking to and fro

To the west of the Sanghârâma is the washing tank of Tathâgata, and where he cleansed his begging dish and washed his clothes These tanks are protected by Nâgas, so that no one may defile the water.

By the side of the lake there is a Stûpa where Buddha, whilst he was practising the preparatory life of a Bôdhisattva in the form of a six-tusked white elephant, gave his tusks in charity to a hunter

Here also is the place where, when he was born as a bird, he joined the company of a monkey and a white elephant, and making a covenant as to their age according to a Nyagrôdha tree, went forth to convert men.

[1] Or, covered with brass plates. Dr. Mitra's Nepalese Buddhist Catalogue, p. 121, &c.
[2] Or, Jyotipâla Bodhisattva. See

a stone column standing here, which records the circumstances of the Nirvâna of Buddha, but does not state the year or the month.

The current tradition relates that Buddha lived in the world eighty years, and that he entered Nirvâna the 15th day of the latter half of the month Vaiśâkha, which corresponds with the 15th day of the second month (with us). The school of the Sarvâstivâdins again say that Buddha entered Nirvâna during the second half of the month Kârtika This would correspond with the 8th day of the ninth month (with us).

Some say that 1200 years have passed since the Nirvâna others, 1500 years others, more than 900 years, but not yet the full period of 1000 years[1]

Again, there are towers erected where Tathâgata, sitting up in his golden coffin, preached on behalf of his mother, and stretching out his arms questioned Ânanda, and showed his feet to Kâśyapa, also where they burnt his body with scented wood, and the eight kings divided his bone-relics

Again, passing 500 li or so through a great forest, we come to the kingdom of Pó-lo-ni-sse (Bânâras)

This kingdom is about 4000 li in circuit The capital borders, on the west, on the river Ganges, it is about ten li in length, and five or six li in breadth

There are about thirty Sañghârâmas, and 2000 priests who study the teaching of the Sarvâstivâdins, belonging to the Little Vehicle

Crossing the Pó-lo-ni-sse river (Varanâ), and going north-east ten li or so, we come to the Sanghârâma of the "Stag-desert" The lofty turrets (of the convent) mingle with the clouds, and the long galleries unite at the four corners of the building. There are about 1500 priests here, who study the Little Vehicle according to the Sammatîya school

Within the great court is a vihâra 100 feet high;

[1] Records, ii 33, n 91

there are stone steps, and brick niches arranged in regular order round the storeys of the building, in each niche is a gilded figure of Buddha

Within the great hall (or house) is a figure of Buddha in brass (calamine stone),[1] of the actual size of Tathâgata's body; he is represented as turning the wheel of the law

To the south-east of the Vihâra is a stone Stûpa, erected by Aśôka-râja, about 100 feet high, in front of it is a stone column about 70 feet high This is the place where Buddha first began to preach By the side of it is the place where Mei-ta-li (Maitri) Bôdhisattva received the predictive assurance

Again to the west is a Stûpa, this is the place where Buddha in former days was born as Prabhâpâla Bôdhisattva [2] in the midst of the Bhadra Kalpa, when men lived to 20,000 years of age At this time Kâśyapa being Buddha, he received a predictive assurance here

To the south of this spot is a place where the four Buddhas of the past age walked to and fro In length this terrace is about 500 feet, and in height seven feet It is made of a greenish blue stone and bears on its surface the impression of the four Buddhas walking to and fro

To the west of the Sanghârâma is the washing tank of Tathâgata, and where he cleansed his begging dish and washed his clothes. These tanks are protected by Nâgas, so that no one may defile the water

By the side of the lake there is a Stûpa where Buddha, whilst he was practising the preparatory life of a Bôdhisattva in the form of a six-tusked white elephant, gave his tusks in charity to a hunter

Here also is the place where, when he was born as a bird, he joined the company of a monkey and a white elephant, and making a covenant as to their age according to a Nyagrôdha tree, went forth to convert men.

[1] Or, covered with brass plates. Dr Mitra's Nepalese Buddhist Catalogue, p 121, &c.
[2] Or, Jyotipâla Bodhisattva. See

Again, to the south, is the place where the Lady Âmradârikâ gave the garden in charity to Buddha

Again, there is the place where Buddha consented (to attain) Nirvâna, in accordance with the request of Mâra râja

Leaving the southern borders of Vâisalî and following the Ganges river for 100 li or so, we came to the town of Svêtapura, where the Master obtained the Sûtra called Bôdhisattva-pitaka [1]

Again, going south and crossing the Ganges river, we come to the kingdom of Magadha [2] This kingdom is about 5000 li [3] in circuit The population is learned and highly virtuous There are about fifty Sanghârâmas and ten thousand priests, mostly attached to the Great Vehicle.

To the south of the river there is an old town about seventy li in circuit Although it is waste and desolate, the parapets of the walls still remain

In old days, when men's lives were of immeasurable length, then this town was called Kusumapura, [4] because the king's palace had so many flowers, it was so called Afterwards, when men's lives dwindled down to a few thousand years, then it was called Pâtaliputtra-pura, after the Pâtali tree [5] (the trumpetflower-tree)

One hundred years after the Nirvâna there was a king called Aśôka, the great grandson of Bimbisârarâja, [6] he transferred his court from Râjagriha to this place Since then many generations have passed, and now nothing but the old foundations remain, and of several hundred convents only two or three survive

To the north of the old palace (precinct), bordering on the river Ganges, is a little town, this town has about 1000 houses, to the north of the palace there is a stone

[1] This seems to be parenthetical

[2] Records, Book VIII

[3] Julien gives 600 li by mistake

[4] Explained to mean the city of the palace of fragrant flowers

[5] For the story of this tree, vide Records, vol II p 83

[6] Cf Dipavamsa, VI 15, 18 (Oldenberg's translation) According to this work (V 25 and VI 99) the great grandson of Bimbisâra was Susunâga, who, in the first passage, is described as the father of Asôka, and the latter passage spoken of as Asôka (Kâlâsoka) himself Cf Records, II 85 and 102, n. 41.

pillar several tens of feet high, this is the place where Aśôka made the hell (place of torture)

The Master of the Law remained in the little city seven days, and paid worship to the sacred traces

To the south of the place of torture is a Stûpa, this is one of the 84,000 which the king built by the aid of human artificers. Within it is a measure of the relics of Tathâgata, which ever and again exhibit a divine brilliancy.

Again, there is a Vihâra in which is a stone on which Tathâgata walked on the stone is an impression of the feet of Buddha in length a foot and eight inches, in breadth six inches Under either foot is the sign of the 1000-spoked wheel, and on each of the ten toes is the mark of the swastika, with figures of flowers, vases, fishes, &c, all of which sparkle with light These are the traces left on a great square stone[1] upon which Buddha stood, when, after leaving Vâisalî, he reached this spot, being about to attain Nirvâna, he was on the southern side of the river, and addressed Ananda thus, as he stood "This is the very last time that I shall gaze (at a distance) upon the Vajrâsana[2] and Râjagriha," and the traces of his feet on this stone remained.

To the north of the Vihâra is a stone column about thirty feet high; on this pillar is written a record that Aśôka-râja three times gave the whole of Jambudvîpa in charity to Buddha, Dharma and Samgha, and three times bought back his inheritance (i e his empire) with jewels and treasure.

To the south-east of the old city are the ruins of the Kukkutârama[3] convent, which was built by Aśôka

[1] This phrase is omitted by Julien, but it is an important one, as it enables us to identify Pl xxvi fig 1, Tree and Serpent Worship, with this

[2] That is, the diamond-seat, on which he had reached perfect enlightenment

[3] Asokârama, Dip, vii. 59.

râja· it was here he convoked the 1000 priests and supplied them with the four kinds of religious offerings.[1]

The Master of the Law paid reverence to all these sacred traces, during seven days, visiting them severally

Then going south-west six or seven yôjanas he came to the Tiladaka[2] convent In this convent were several tens of priests of the three pitakas (i e Buddhist priests), who hearing of the arrival of the Master of the Law came out in a body to meet and escort him

From this, again, proceeding southwards 100 li or so, we come to the Bôdhi tree The tree is protected by high and very solid brick walls, the wall stretching east and west is long, but narrower from north to south The principal gate faces the east looking towards the river Ni-len-shan (Nairanjâna) The southern gate borders on a great flower-tank. The west a mountain side protects. The north gate leads into the great Sangh-hârâma. Within this on every side are the sacred traces of religion, vihâras, stûpas, and so on, all of which kings and great ministers and rich nobles have constructed from a principle of reverence, and for the perpetual memory (of their religion).

In the centre of the whole enclosure is the Diamond throne, which was perfected at the beginning of the Bhadra Kalpa, and rose up from the ground when the world was formed. It is the very central point of the universe, and goes down to the golden wheel, from whence it arises upwards to the earth's surface It is perfected of diamond, and is about 100 paces round. In using the word diamond we mean that it is firm and indestructible, and able to resist all things.[3] If it were not for its support the earth could not remain, if the seat were not so strong as diamond, then no part of the world could support one who has entered the samâdhi of perfect fixedness (vajra samâdhi).

[1] Vide the Dipavansa, vii 57, 58, 59. The statement in the Text, agreeing as it does with the Dipa vamsa, evidently refers to the third Buddhist council held under Dhammâsoka. Cf Records, ii p 95.

[2] Vide Records, ii. p 102 n.

[3] ἀφθίτον ἄει.

And now, whoever desires to conquer Mâra, and to attain perfect wisdom, must sit here; if it were assayed elsewhere, the earth would overtop itself. Therefore, the 1000 Buddhas of the Bhadra Kalpa have all attained their emancipation here

But again, the place of completed wisdom is also called the arena of wisdom (Bôdhimanda). If the world were shaken to its foundations (overturned), this place alone would not be moved

After one or two hundred years from the present time, the merit of the human family becoming less, on coming to the Bôdhi tree, the Vajrâsana will no longer be seen

After the Nirvâna of Buddha the kings of the different countries agreed to define the limits (of this sacred enclosure) towards the north and south[1] from the point of the two images of Kwan-tsze-tsai Bôdhisattva, which are seated looking towards the east. According to tradition, when these images of the Bôdhisattva become invisible, then the Law of Buddha will perish The southern image has already been swallowed up as far as the breast

The Bôdhi tree is the same as the Pippala tree (Ficus religiosa)

Whilst Buddha was in the world the height of the tree was several hundred feet, but as wicked kings have continually cut it down and destroyed it the tree is now only about fifty feet high. As Buddhā, whilst sitting beneath this tree, reached perfect wisdom (anuttara Bôdhi), it is therefore called the Bôdhi tree The bark is of a yellowish white colour, and its leaves of a shining green, it retains its leaves through the autumn and winter, only, when the day of Buddha's Nirvâna comes, the leaves all fall off, but when the day has passed, they

[1] The passage evidently refers to the territories of the kings, as Julien translates the limits of the Bodhimanda, not to all grow again Every year on this day the kings of the countries, the ministers and magistrates, assemble beneath the tree, and pour milk on its roots and light lamps and scatter flowers, then collecting the leaves, they retire [1]

The Master of the Law when he came to worship the Bôdhi tree and the figure of Tathâgata at the time of his reaching perfect wisdom, made (afterwards) by (the interposition of) Mâitrêya Bôdhisattva,[2] gazed on these objects with the most sincere devotion, he cast himself down with his face to the ground in worship, and with much grief and many tears in his self-affliction, he sighed, and said. "At the time when Buddha perfected himself in wisdom, I know not in what condition I was, in the troublous whirl of birth and death; but now, in this latter time of image (worship), having come to this spot and reflecting on the depth and weight of the body of my evil deeds, I am grieved at heart, and my eyes filled with tears"

At this time there happened to come to the spot, from different quarters, a body of priests who had just broken up from their religious retreat, numbering several thousand men; these persons, when they beheld (? the Master) were all moved to pity and sorrow

For a yôjana around this spot the space is full of sacred traces. The Master therefore remained here for eight or nine days to pay his worship at each spot successively

On the tenth day he went to the Nâlanda temple, the congregation there had selected four of their number, of distinguished position, to go and meet him; journeying in their company about seven yôjanas he reached the farm-house [3] belonging to the temple. It was in (the village, where) this house (stands), that the

[1] Perhaps this is the reason why it is sometimes called the Pi to, i.e., "the leaf tree."

[2] Vide Records, vol ii p 120

[3] So I translate chwang

honourable Maudgalyâyana was born Halting here for short refreshment, then, with two hundred priests and some thousand lay patrons, who surrounded him as he went, recounting his praises, and carrying standards, umbrellas, flowers and perfumes, he entered Nâlanda.

Having arrived there he was joined by the whole body of the community, who exchanged friendly greetings with the Master, and then placing a special seat by the side of the Sthavira (presiding priest), they requested the Master to be seated The others then also sat down

After this the Karmadâna [1] was directed to sound the Ghanta and proclaim "Whilst the Master of the Law dwells in the convent, all the commodities used by the priests and all the appliances of religion are for his convenience, in common with the rest"

Then selecting twenty men of middle age, skilful in explaining the religious books and of dignified carriage, they deputed them to conduct the Master to the presence of Ching-fa-tsong (treasure of the good law). This is the same as Śilabhadra

The congregation, from the excessive respect they have to him, do not venture to call him by his name, but give him the appellation of Ching-fa-tsong

Whereupon, following the rest, he entered to salute this eminent person Having seen him, then the chief almoner presented him (i e Śilabadra) with all things necessary without stint, paying his respects according to the proper ceremonial, approaching him on his knees and kissing his foot, and bowing his head to the ground. The usual greetings and compliments being finished, Fa-tsong ordered seats to be brought and spread out, and

[1] In the original Wei-na, i e Vena "the early riser" He is the sub director of the Convent Vena, in the sense of the rising sun, or, the early riser, is found in the Rig-Veda, vide Wallis, "Cosmology of the Rig Veda," p 35. But Vena has also the sense of the "Knower," and hence the Chinese rendering "Chi sse," he who knows things, or, business He is according to Julien, also called Karmadâna, which appears to be allied to the Chinese kiun (karma) The Pâli equivalent in Bhattuddesako desired the Master of the Law and the rest to be seated When seated he asked the Master of the Law from what part he came; in reply he said "I am come from the country of China, desiring to learn from your instruction the principles of the Yoga-Śâstra"

Hearing this, he called for his disciple Buddhabhadra, whilst tears filled his eyes, now Buddhabhadra was the nephew of Fa-tsong, and upwards of seventy years of age, thoroughly versed in the Sûtras and Śâstras, and excellent in discourse Fa-tsong addressing him said "You may recount for the sake of the company present, the history of my sickness and sufferings three years ago"

Buddhabhadra having heard the request sobbed aloud and wept—but then restraining his tears he declared the past history and said "My master (Upâdhyâya) some time ago was painfully afflicted with colic On each occasion when the attack came on, his hands and feet were cramped with pain, and he would suddenly cry out with agony as if he had been burned with fire, or pierced with a knife; the attack would subside as suddenly as it came on, and this went on for twenty years and more. But three years ago the severity of his suffering was so hard to bear, that he loathed his very life and desired to starve himself to death In the middle of the night he had a dream in which he saw three Dêvas (heavenly men), one of the colour of gold, another of the colour of bright crystal, another as white as silver, their appearance and form commanding, of dignified presence, and clad in light shining garments, approaching the Master they asked him, saying 'Are you anxious to get free from this body of yours? The Scriptures speak, saying, the body is born to suffering, they do not say we should hate and cast away the body. You in one of your past births were the king of a certain country, and you caused much suffering among living creatures, and now you have this suffering as your recompense. Search out therefore and examine your past faults, and repent of them sincerely, take your affliction quietly and patiently; labour diligently in explaining the Sûtras and Śâstras; you will thus get rid of your pain yourself, but if you loathe your body, there will be no cessation to your sufferings'

"The Master having heard these words, paid his adorations with the utmost sincerity

"Then the golden-coloured one, pointing to the one that shone like crystal, said to the Master 'Dost thou know or not that this one is Avalôkiteśvara Bôdhisattva?' and then pointing to the silver-coloured one he added 'and this is Mâitreya Bôdhisattva'

"The Master immediately paid worship to Mâitreya and asked him, saying 'Your servant Śilabhadra has ever prayed that he may be born in your exalted palace courts, but he knows not whether he will gain his wish or not' In reply, he said, 'You must widely disseminate the true law, and then you shall be born there.'

"The golden-coloured one said 'And I am Manjuśri Bôdhisattva Seeing that you desired to get rid of your life, contrary to your true interest, we are come to exhort you to the contrary, you should rely on our words, and exhibit abroad the true law, the Yoga sâstra and the rest, for the benefit of those who have not yet heard it Your body will thus by degrees become easy and you will suffer no further pain Do not overlook that there is a priest of the country of China who delights in examining the great Law and is desirous to study with you you ought to instruct him carefully'

"Fă-tsong having heard these words worshipped and answered 'I shall obey, according to your honourable instructions' Having said this, they disappeared.

"From that time the sufferings of the Master from his disease came to an end."

The company present hearing this history were all filled with wonder at the miraculous event.

The Master of the Law having heard for himself this narrative was unable to control his feelings of sympathy and joy. He again paid his respects and said "If it be so, as you say, then Hiuen-Tsiang ought with his utmost strength to listen to and practise (your religious advice) Would that your reverence, of his great compassion, would receive me for the purpose of instruction"

Then Fa-tsong asked him further, "For how many years have you been on your journey?" He answered, "During three years," and so, as the particulars of his directions, received in his dream, were completely fulfilled, he caused the Master of the Law to rejoice in their relationship as Master and disciple

After these words he returned and went to the college of Bâlâditya-râja and took up his residence in the dwelling of Buddhabhadra, having four storeys (or, the fourth storey), who entertained him for seven days After this he went to reside in a dwelling to the north of the abode of Dharmapâla Bôdhisattva, where he was provided with every sort of charitable offering Each day he received 120 Jambiras,[1] 20 Pin-long-tseu (pûga, areca nut) 20 tau-k'au (nutmegs), an ounce (tael) of Camphor, and a ching (peck) of Mahâśâli rice This rice is as large as the black bean, and when cooked is aromatic and shining, like no other rice at all It grows only in Mâgadha, and nowhere else It is offered only to the king or to religious persons of great distinction, and hence the name kung-ta-jin-mai (the rice offered to the great householder)

Every month he was presented with three measures of oil, and daily a supply of butter and other things according to his need

A pure brother (a Upāsaka)[2] and a Brahman, relieved

[1] A fruit

[2] Julien translates tsing jin by Śramaṇa, but it evidently means a lay-brother Cf Fa-hien, cap iii Probably, however, it had better be translated a Brahmachârî from all religious duties, accompanied him with a riding elephant

In the Nâlanda convent the abbot entertains a myriad priests after this fashion, for besides the Master of the Law there were men from every quarter, and where in all their wanderings have they met with such courteous treatment as this?

The Nâlanda monastery is the same as the "charity without intermission" monastery[1] The tradition of the old people is this —To the south of the convent, in the middle of an Âmra garden, is a pool In this pool is a Nâga called Nâlanda, and the convent built by the side of the pool is therefore called after his name Again there is a saying that Tathâgata whilst a Bôdhisattva was the king of a great country and built his capital in this place He was deeply affected towards the orphans and destitute, and, ever moved by this principle, gave away all he had for their good. In memory of this goodness they named the place "doing charitable acts without intermission"

The place was originally the garden of the lord (Shreshtin) Âmra[2] (or, Amara) Five hundred merchants bought it for ten lacs of gold pieces, and presented it to Buddha. Here Buddha preached the law for three months, and most of the merchants obtained the fruit of Arhatship, in consequence.

After the Nirvâna of Buddha an old king[3] of this country called Śakrâditya, from a principle of loving obedience to Buddha, built this convent

After his decease his son Buddhagupta-râja seized the throne, and continued the vast undertaking, he built, towards the south, another Sañghârâma

Then his son[4] (successor) Tathâgata-râja built a Sañghârâma to the eastward

[1] Records, 167, n.

[2] Vide Max Muller's India, p 327

[3] Or, a former king, vide p 112, infra, n. 1

[4] The expression chi tsz' need not mean "his son," but his direct descendant This would reconcile the two accounts in the Si-yu-ki and here Vide Records, II. 168

Next, his son (or, direct descendant) Bâlâditya[1] built a Sañghârâma to the north-east. Afterwards the king, seeing some priests who came from the country of China to receive his religious offerings, was filled with gladness, and he gave up his royal estate and became a recluse.[2]

His son[3] Vajra succeeded and built another Sañghârâma to the north

After him a king of Mid-India built by the side of this another Sañghârâma.

Thus six kings in connected succession added to these structures

Moreover, the whole establishment is surrounded by a brick wall, which encloses the entire convent from without One gate opens into the great college, from which are separated eight other halls, standing in the middle (of the Sañghârâma) The richly adorned towers, and the fairy-like turrets, like pointed hill-tops, are congregated together. The observatories seem to be lost in the vapours (of the morning), and the upper rooms tower above the clouds

From the windows one may see how the winds and the clouds (produce new forms), and above the soaring eaves the conjunctions of the sun and moon (may be observed)

And then we may add how the deep, translucent ponds, bear on their surface the blue lotus, intermingled with the Kie-ni (Kanaka)[4] flower, of deep red colour, and at intervals the Âmra groves spread over all, their shade

All the outside courts, in which are the priests' chambers, are of four stages The stages have dragon-projections and coloured eaves, the pearl-red pillars, carved and ornamented, the richly adorned balustrades,

[1] Bâlâditya = the young, or rising sun May we compare with this Pallas (Minerva)?

[2] Records, vol ii 169

[3] Here the expression denotes that Vajra was the son of Bâlâditya, and this agrees with the Si-yu-ki

[4] Butea frondosa (M Williams' Sc Dict. s.v)

and the roofs covered with tiles that reflect the light in a thousand shades, these things add to the beauty of the scene

The Sañghârâmas of India are counted by myriads, but this is the most remarkable for grandeur and height. The priests, belonging to the convent, or strangers (residing therein) always reach to the number of 10,000, who all study the Great Vehicle, and also (the works belonging to) the eighteen sects,[1] and not only so, but even ordinary works, such as the Vêdas and other books, the Hetuvidyâ, Śabdavidyâ, the Chikitsâvidyâ, the works on Magic (Âtharvavêda), the Sañkhya, besides these they thoroughly investigate the "miscellaneous" works There are 1000 men who can explain twenty collections of Sûtrâs and Śâstras, 500 who can explain thirty collections, and perhaps ten men, including the Master of the Law, who can explain fifty collections Śîlabhadra alone has studied and understood the whole number His eminent virtue and advanced age have caused him to be regarded as the chief member of the community Within the Temple they arrange every day about 100 pulpits for preaching, and the students attend these discourses without any fail, even for a minute (an inch shadow on the dial)

The priests dwelling here, are, as a body, naturally (or, spontaneously) dignified and grave, so that during the 700 years since the foundation of the establishment,[2] there has been no single case of guilty rebellion against the rules.

The king of the country respects and honours the priests, and has remitted the revenues of about 100 villages for the endowment of the convent Two hundred householders in these villages, day by day, contribute

[1] That is, the eighteen schools (p'u) of Buddhism

[2] This seems to throw light on the date of Śakrâditya, if he "after the Nirvâna," was the first to found the Nâlanda Convent, and this was 700 years before Hiuen-Tsiang, we may suppose he lived about the first century B C The expression, therefore, in the Si yu-ki, "not long after" (Records II 168), must be taken, cum grano, to mean "a good while after" several hundred piculs[1] of ordinary rice, and several hundred catties[2] in weight of butter and milk. Hence the students here, being so abundantly supplied, do not require to ask for the four requisites.[3] This is the source of the perfection of their studies, to which they have arrived

The Master of the Law having resided in the Nâlanda Temple for some time, then proceeded towards Râjagrîha to examine, and pay reverence to, the holy traces there

The old city of Râjagrîha is that which is called Kiu-she-kie-la-po-lo (Kuśâgarapura) This city is in the centre of Magadha, and in old times many rulers and kings lived in it This land, moreover, produces some excellent scented grass (Kuśâ), and hence the name given to the city On the four sides it is entirely shut in by lofty and steep mountains, as if they had been cut out (like a wall) On the west side the approach is through a narrow passage, but passing in from the north, is a large gate The land is extended from north to south, and narrow from east to west it is about 150 li in circuit Within it is another little town, the foundation walls being about thirty li round On every side are forests of the Kanaka tree, which flower all the year round, the petals being of a golden colour

Outside the north face of the royal precinct there is a stûpa; this is the spot where Devadatta in conjunction with Ajâtaśatru râja let loose the treasure-protecting drunken elephant[4] wishing to destroy Buddha.

North-east of this is a stûpa, this is the spot where Śâriputra heard the Bhikshu Aśvajita explain the Law, and in consequence attained the fruit (of Arhatship).[5]

Not far to the north of this is a large and deep ditch;

[1] 1 picul = 133⅓ lbs

[2] 1 catty = 160 lbs.

[3] Clothes, food, bedding, and medicine

[4] Called Ratnapâla or Vâsupâla, according to Rockhill (Life of the Buddha, p 93), or Dhanapâla, according to Spence Hardy (Manual, p 321) The scene at Ajanta (Speirs' Anc India, p 290) has been rightly identified with this episode

[5] Vide Records, ii 175.

this is the place where Śîgupta, obeying the words of the heretics, desired to destroy Buddha by fire (concealed in) the ditch, and by poisoned food [1]

Again, to the north-east of the great ditch, in a corner of the mountain city, is a Stûpa, this is the place where the great physician, Jîvaka, built a preaching hall for Buddha By the side of it is the old house of Jîvaka, still visible

Going north-east of the palace-city (i.e. Kuśâgarapura) fourteen or fifteen li, we come to the mountain called Ki-li-to-lo-kiu-to (Gṛidhrakûta) This mountain is a connected succession of ridges, the northern peak, rising grandly above the rest, stands up boldly by itself, and is in shape like a vulture, it also has the form of a high tower, hence its name (Tower, or Peak of the Vulture) The springs are clear, the rocks singular in shape, and the trees covered with rich verdure

When Tathâgata was in the world he used frequently to live here, and it was here he declared the Fă-hwa (Saddharma puṇḍarika), the Ta-pan-jo (Mahâprajña), and other sûtras innumerable

Going through the north gate of the mountain city one li or so, we come to the bamboo garden of Kalanda, where there is still a brick house

Here Buddha in old time often dwelt, and here he laid down the binding rules of the Vinaya The owner of this garden was called Karanda, he had before given this garden in charity to different heretics, but after he had seen Buddha and heard the deep truths of his Law, he was sorry that he had not given the garden in charity to Tathâgata. The earth-spirit, knowing his thoughts, caused such prodigies to appear as frightened the heretics, and then, with a view to make them go away, he spake as follows "The lord of the place wishes to give this garden in charity to Buddha. you had better begone quickly!" The heretics, concealing their vexation, went away Then the lord of the place, filled with joy, built a Vihâra, and when he had finished it he went and invoked Buddha to come there and reside, so Buddha accepted the place as a gift

[1] This history of Śîgupta's plot forms the fifth story in the Jâtaka-mâlâ Śâstra

To the east of the garden is a stûpa, which was built by Ajâtaśatru râja. After the Nirvâna of Tathâgata the different kings received a portion of his relics, Ajâtaśatru râja, having got his share, coming back, built a tower for the purpose of paying them religious worship. Aśôka-râja, exciting his heart to religion, desired to build in every place sacred edifices, and so he opened this tower and took the relics, but he let a small portion of them remain, which, even down to the present time, on occasions, emit a brilliant light

Going south-west from the Bamboo garden five or six li, by the side of a mountain, there is another garden, of the same sort, in which is a great house[1] This is where the honourable Mahâ Kâśyapa with 999 Arhats after the Nirvâna of Buddha, collected together the three Pitakas

At the time of the collection there were an innumerable number of holy persons assembled together, like clouds Kâśyapa addressing them, said "Among those present those may remain who have a personal knowledge of the three vidyâs, and who possess the six supernatural powers, and have completely mastered the entire treasure of the Law of Buddha, without flaw or omission Of the rest let each return to his place of residence"

There remained, in consequence, 999 men who were Arhats, in the selected place of study.

On this Kâśyapa addressed Ânanda "You have not yet got rid of all remains (leaks, i.e. human frailties), do not soil, by your presence, this pure congregation."

Ananda, ashamed, retired. During the night, how-

[1] That is, the Sattapanṇi cave But refer to Records, ii. p. 156 n.

ever, by diligent application, he snapped the bonds of the three worlds, and became perfect as an Arhat

Then returning he came and humbly bowed at the door of the assembly

Kâśyapa then asked him, saying. "Art thou free from fetters?"

He replied: "Yea!"

Then he added: "If it is so indeed, there is no need to unfasten the door and open it, enter in as thou wilt!"

Ananda then entered in through a small crevice in the door, and saluted the feet of the priesthood

Then Kâśyapa taking his hand, said "I was anxious that you should get rid of all imperfections, and obtain the holy fruit, and so excluded you, knowing this, you should have no grudge in your heart"

Ananda said "If I felt any grudge, how could I be said to be free from fetters?"

On this he saluted him respectfully and sat down

They then kept the first fifteen days of the Rain-Rest

Kâśyapa addressing Ananda, said "Tathâgata always termed you in the congregation a disciple, or listener (Śêkha),[1] who thoroughly knew the laws of religion You may therefore now mount the pulpit, and for the sake of the assembly recite the Sûtra pitaka, which is the same as all the Sûtras"

On this Ânanda, obeying the mandate, arose, and after bowing down towards the mountain of the Parinirvâna of Buddha (his grave, or, the place of his death), he mounted the pulpit and repeated the Sûtras The congregation received them at his dictation and wrote them down. Having so recorded them, he (Kâśyapa) requested Upâli to recite the Vinaya pitaka, that is, the whole body of the Moral Rules.

This being done, Kâśyapa himself recited the Abhidharma pitaka, i e the collection (Sûtra) of the meaning of the Śâstras.

[1] Lotus, p 296.

During the rest of the three months, having finished the collection of the three pitakas, and inscribed them on leaf of the Peito (the palm leaf), they then distributed them everywhere for use

Then the holy men said one to another, "Our collection may well be termed 'the result of the goodness, or kindness of Buddha,' for from this alone (i e his goodness) proceeds what we now have had the privilege of hearing."

From the fact of Kâśyapa being the president among the priests, this collection (or, assembly) is called that of the Sthavirâs

Twenty li to the west of this place is a Stûpa built by Aśôka-râja, this is the spot where the assembly of the Great Congregation (Mahâsañghikas) was held

The many thousand priests both of those who had reached complete wisdom, and those of inferior condition,[1] who were not admitted to the assembly of Kâśyapa all collected here, and said among themselves: "During Tathâgata's lifetime, we had all one master, but now the Lord is dead, they have excluded us by their vote; why should not we also make a collection of the Dharma pitaka, in return for the goodness of Buddha?"

So they made another collection of the Sûtra-pitaka, and the Vinaya-pitaka, and the Abhidharma-pitaka, and of the Miscellaneous-pitaka, and the Dhâranî-pitaka, five pitakas in all

As in this assembly there were both ordinary persons[2] and holy men present; it is called the convocation of the Mahâsañghikas[3]

North-east of this three or four li we come to the town of Râjagriha, the outside walls have been destroyed, within the city there are still lofty (buildings).

[1] Sâicha and asaicha, vide Lot ut supra

[2] Fan fu, "mixed people." Cf the Pâlî puthujjana.

[3] This differs from the usual account which derives the Mahâsanghika school from the schism at Vaiśalî.

It is about twenty li round, and has one gate

Formerly, when Bimbisâra râja lived in Kuśâgârapura, the population was large and the houses were closely packed In consequence of this the calamity of fire was of frequent occurrence So a decree was made that in whatever house a fire next occurred through negligence, that the owner should be expelled and placed in the "cold forest" The "cold forest," in that country, means the evil place where they cast the dead

Shortly afterwards the royal palace suddenly caught fire and was destroyed, the king said "I am a ruler of men if I transgress and do not act in agreement with the law, I cannot repress the lower orders in transgressing"

He then ordered the Prince royal to conduct the government during his absence, and he himself went to reside in the cemetery

At this time the king of Vaiśâlî hearing that Bimbisâra was living alone in the desert beyond the city, was anxious to summon his troops and to capture him. The outpost guards, finding this out, informed the king, and fortified the place where he was And because the king first dwelt here, they therefore called the place Râjagrĭha.[1] This is the new city Afterwards the King Ajâtaśatru established his authority here in succession to his father—and it remained so, till Aśôka-râja removed the capital to Pâtaliputra and gave the old town to the Brâhmans so now in the city, there are only about 1000 families of Brâhmans

Within the palace-city towards the south-west corner there is a Stûpa · this is the site of the ruinous house of Jyôtishka, the nobleman[2] By the side of it is the place where Râhula was received as a disciple.

To the north-west of the Nâlanda convent there is a great Vihâra in height about 200 feet, which was built by Balâditya râja It is highly decorated and of an imposing character In it there is an image of Buddha the same as the image under the Bôdhi Tree.

[1] "The house of the king" [2] Chang-che.

To the north-east of the Vihâra is a Stûpa, the site where Buddha formerly preached the law for seven days.

To the north-west again is a place where the four past Buddhas sat down

To the south of this is the brass-covered Vihâra constructed by Śilâditya râja, the work, though not yet finished, is sufficiently advanced to show that its plan denotes a height of 100 feet and more, when completed

Again to the east about 200 paces is a copper image of Buddha about eighty feet high, housed over by a pavilion in six stages. This was the work of Pûrnavarma-râja in old days [1]

Again going eastward several li there is a stûpa which denotes the place where Bimbisâra-râja, with many myriads of people, went to meet and first saw Buddha, who having arrived at supreme wisdom, was directing his way towards the city of Râjagriha.

Again going east thirty li or so we come to the Indra-śilâguha Mountain

In front of a Sañghârâma on the eastern cliffs is a stûpa called Hamsa.

Formerly this Sañghârâma was given to the doctrine of the Little Vehicle called the "gradual stage," which permits the use of the three pure condiments On one occasion the steward of the establishment, not having been able to procure the necessary provisions, was standing by the side in great distress, seeing no mode of escape (at a loss what to do), when he beheld a flock of wild geese flying past, then he cried out in jest—"To-day the priests are in dire want, my good masters! recognise the opportunity!" Having spoken these words, the leading goose, on the sound of the appeal, turned and fell down from the clouds on high, and lay his body prostrate The Bhikshu having seen (this miracle), filled with astonishment and fear, spread the news abroad among the fraternity The priests had nothing to say in reply, on hearing the news, but filled with reverential fear, with many sighs and tears, they talked together and said "This is a Bôdhisattva! What man among us would dare to taste the flesh?" When Tathâgata established his "gradual method" of instruction, he forbade us to suppose that these early words of his, were intended to be final,[1] he warned us against foolishly supposing there could be no change, and hence this admonition!

[1] Vide Records, ii. 174.

From that time and afterwards they adopted the method of the Great Vehicle, and used no more the three pure aliments

Then they built a "spiritual tower," for the burial of the dead goose, and signified thereby for the good of posterity, their mind in so doing Such was the origin of this tower

Thus the Master of the Law having visited the sacred traces all round, and paid his reverence to them, returned to the Nâlanda Monastery, and requested Śîlabhadra, Master of the Law, to explain the Yôga-śâstra, in the presence of many thousand auditors

The exposition being ended, after a little time there was a Brahman who uttered some piteous cries outside the assembly, and then in turn began to laugh.

Some messengers asked him why he acted so.

In reply he said. "I am a man of Eastern India; formerly I made a vow (prayer), in the place where the image of Avalôkitêśvara stands on the Pôtaraka Mountain, that I might become a king.

"Bôdhisattva then appeared for my sake and reproved

[1] This amounts to a declaration of belief in the principle of "religious development."

me, saying 'Make not such a prayer as this hereafter, in such a year and month and day, the Master of the Law, Śîlabhadra, for the sake of a priest of China, will explain the Yôga-śâstra, you should go there and listen! from hearing this discourse you will hereafter be able to see Buddha what good then in being a king?'

"And now," he said, "I have seen the priest of China come, and the Master for his sake expounding the law, in agreement with the old prophecy, and this is why I weep and laugh"

On this account the Master of the Law, Sîlabhadra, requested him to remain there and listen to the explanation of the Sûtras for fifteen months and after the lectures, he sent a man with the Brahman to Śîlâditya râja, who allotted him the revenues of three villages for his sustenance

The Master of the Law whilst he stopped in the convent, heard the explanation of the Yôga-śâstra, three times the Nyâyâ-Anusâra-śâstra, once, the Hin hiang-tui-fă-ming, once, the Hetuvidyâ-śâstra and the Śabdavidyâ and the tsah liang śâstras, twice, the Prânyamûla śâstra-tîkâ, and the Śata-śâstra, thrice The Kosha, Vibhâshâ, and the Shatpadâbhidharma śâstras, he had already heard explained in the different parts of Kaśmir, but when he came to this convent he wished to study them again to satisfy some doubts he had this done, he also devoted himself to the study of the Brâhman books and the work called Vyâkarana on Indian letters, whose origin is from the most remote date, and whose author is unknown

At the beginning of each Kalpa, Brahma-râja first declares it, and then transmits it for Devas and men to use. Being thus declared by Brahma-râja, therefore men call it Fan, or Brahmâ, writing The words of this book are very extensive, comprising a hundred myriad ślokas It is the same as the old commentary calls the Vyâkara(na)-śâstra. But this pronunciation is not complete, if correct it would be Vyâkaranam, which is another name for "a treatise relating to the record of the science of sounds." It treats at large, in a mnemonic way, on all the laws of language and illustrates them, hence the name

At the beginning of the Kalpa of perfection (vaivarta kalpa) Brahma-râja first declared this book, it then comprised 100 myriad of ślôkas, afterwards, at the beginning of the Vaivarta-siddha-Kalpa, that is, the kalpa, or period, of establishment, Ti-shih (Śakra-raja) reduced them to ten myriad ślôkas After this a Brahman of the town Śâlâtura in Gandhâra of North India, whose name was Pânini Rishi, reduced them to 8000 ślôkas. This is the work at present used in India

Lately a Brahman of South India, at the request of a king of South India, reduced them further to 2500 ślôkas This work is widely spread, and used throughout all the frontier provinces, but the well-read scholars of India do not follow it as their guide in practice

This then is the fundamental treatise relating to sounds and letters of the Western world, their branch-divisions, distinctions and mutual connections

Again, there is a Vyâkaranam work (mnemonic treatise) of a short kind having 1000 ślôkas, again, there is one of 300 ślôkas on the roots (bases) of letters (i.e. letter roots or bases), again, there are (treatises on the) two separate kinds of letter-groupings, one named Mandaka in 3000 ślôkas, the other called Unâdi in 2500 ślôkas These distinguish letter-groupings from letter-roots. Again, there is the treatise called Ashta-dhâtu (Dhâtu vritti ?) in 800 ślôkas, in this work there is a brief conjunction of letter-bases and letter-groupings. These are all the Vyâkarana treatises.

In distinguishing active and passive expositions (i.e. in expounding the principles of grammar, relating to active and passive verbs) there are these two rules the first, called Ti-yen-to-shing (Tiñanta-vâjyam) having eighteen inflections, the second Su-man-to-shing (Subanta râjyam), having twenty-four inflections, the Tiñanta "sounds" are used in elegant compositions, but seldom in light literature. The twenty-four "sounds" are used in all kinds of composition alike The eighteen inflections of the Tiñanta "sounds" are of two characters 1st, Parasmai, 2nd, Âtmane, each of these has nine inflections, and so together there are eighteen With respect to the nine which come first we know that in ordinary discourse everything has three ways of being viewed, (i e as one thing, or two things, or many things), every other person has three ways of being considered (i e as one other, two other, or many other), and also "oneself" can be considered in three ways (i e as I myself, two of us, or many of us) Thus every single thing may be regarded in these three ways, as one, two of a class, or many, here then are three (three persons and three numbers, altogether nine) In both (voices) the root-word is the same, but the (final) sounds are different. So there are two sets of nine

Now, taking the Parasmai sounds we may speak of a thing as existing or not existing, in all cases Supposing then we says a thing exists, there are three ways of putting (naming) this fact, we may say "it exists" (bhavati) or, "two things exist" (bhavatha)[1] or, "they exist" (bhavanti). And so, speaking of another, we may say "thou dost exist" (bhavasi), or, "you two exist" (bhavatha, for, bhavathah), or, "you all exist" (bhavatha), and so again speaking of oneself we may say "I exist" (bhavâmi), or, "we two exist" (bhavâvah), or, we all exist (bhavâmas)

With regard to the nine case-endings of the Átmane class, they simply take underneath the nine inflections just named the word "vyati," (or, the words ve, ya, ti), in other respects they are the same as the above[2]

[1] For, Bhavatah

[2] This passage is omitted by Julien He gives, however, a note found in the original, which states that in the four Vedas (Veda śâstras) the form bhavamah is used, but elsewhere the form is bhavamas

Thus touching these things, we see how a skilful writer in this language is saved from ambiguity, and also how his meaning may be expressed in the most elegant manner

With respect to the twenty-four inflections of the Subanta "sound (endings)," it is to be observed that every word has altogether eight inflections (cases), and that each of these cases or inflections is subject to three conditions as to number, viz., when one, or two, or many, are concerned Hence arise the twenty-four (sound-endings) Then, again, in connection with these twenty-four inflections we have three other terms, viz, the masculine sound ending, the feminine, and the neuter But regarding the eight inflections, the first exhibits the substance, or basis, of the thing conceived (nominative), the second exhibits the deed done (objective), the third, the means by which, and the doer (instrumental), the fourth, for whom the thing is done (dative), the fifth, what causes the thing (ablative), the sixth, whose is the thing (genitive), the seventh, that which determines (localises) the thing (locative), the eighth, the calling, or summoning, the thing (vocative) Now, for example, let us take the masculine ending, as in the word "man," and go through the eight cases named above

The word "man" in Indian speech is Purusha The root-word has three inflections, viz, Purushah, Purushâu, Purushâs The thing done (object) has three, Purusham, Purushau, Purushân, the instrument by which the thing is done by the doer has also three inflections—Purushêna, Puru(shâ)bhyâm, Purushâbhih or Purushais, "for whom the thing is done," Purushâya, Purushâbhyâm, Purushebhyas, "the cause from which the thing proceeds," Purushât, Purushâbhyâm, Purushebhyas, "whose is the thing," Purushasya, Purushâbhyam, Purushânâm, "the place where," Purushê, Purushayôs, Purushêshu, "the calling case," Hi Purusha, Hi Purushau, Hi Purushâh

From these one or two examples, other cases may be understood; it would be difficult to make a full statement of particulars.

The Master of the Law thoroughly investigated the language (words and phrases), and by talking with those men on the subject of the "pure writings," he advanced excellently in his knowledge Thus he penetrated, and examined completely, all the collection (of Buddhist books), and also studied the sacred books of the Brahmans during five years

From this place he again went to the country of Hiranyaparvata, by the way he came to the Ka-po-tih[1] Sanghârâma (the Kapôtika convent) Two or three li to the south of this is a solitary hill, its steep and rugged sides and lofty peaks, its bushy trees and luxuriant verdure, its fountains of pure and clear water, and its shining flowers exhaling their perfume, have made this spot much renowned, it is covered with sacred buildings, all of which exhibit many and various spiritual prodigies

In the middle of an open space is a Vihâra in which is a sandal-wood figure of the Bôdhisattva Avalôkiteśvara, its appearance is divine and truly worshipful There are many tens of men who for seven or fourteen days continue without food or drink, putting up their prayers and entreaties (in the presence of this figure) Those whose minds are most sincere, forthwith behold the Bôdhisattva with all its characteristic marks, glorious and resplendent, come forth from the sandal-wood figure, and graciously speak with those men concerning the subject of their prayers There are very many men who have thus beheld the Bôdhisattva, and on this account the worshippers have increased in number

The persons (congregation) that minister in religious matters at this shrine, fearing that the crowds who come to worship might pollute the sacred figure, have erected all round it, at a distance of seven paces, a strong wooden balustrade pointed with iron, so that all who come to worship must stand outside the rails. Not being able to come nearer to the image, they cast from the distance the flowers which they bring as offerings; those who succeed in making the flowers rest on the hands of the figure, or hang from its arms, are considered very lucky, and will get their prayers answered The Master of the Law wishing to go to put up his request, bought every kind of flower, and stringing them into garlands, he went to the place of the image Having in the greatest sincerity paid his worship and offered his praises—he fell down on his hands and knees towards the image and put up these three vows —

[1] 路 for 徒

1st Would that I, having finished my studies, may return in peace and quiet to my own country without accident if so, may the flowers alight on the hands of the venerable one!

2nd Would that, in return for the merit and wisdom I am aiming to acquire, I may be born in the Tuśita courts, and be permitted there to worship Mâitreya Bôdhisattva · if so, may the flowers hang on both the arms of the venerable one!

3rd The holy writings say that there is a portion of creatures born in the world, who are without "the nature of Buddha" Hiuen-Tsiang in his ignorance knows not what is his case But if he has the nature of Buddha, and so by preparatory conduct may at last reach perfection as a Buddha, then let the flowers hang suspended from the neck of the venerable one!

Having thus spoken he flung the garlands from the distance, and they each alighted according to his vow

Having thus accomplished what he sought, he was overpowered with joy, and those who were worshipping by his side, and the guardians of the Vihâra, having seen what had occurred, clapped their hands and stamped their feet, as they said "It is a miracle! hereafter, if you arrive at Perfect Wisdom, remember the history of this day, and first come to save us"

Going on gradually from this spot he came to the country of Hiranya There are ten monasteries and about 4000 priests in this kingdom, the priests mostly study the Little Vehicle, and belong to the school of the Sarvâstivâdins

Recently there was a frontier king who deposed the ruler of this country, and bestowed the capital on the priests, in it, moreover, he built two convents, each containing 1000 priests There are two eminent brothers here, one called Tathâgatagupta, the other Kshântisimha, both belonging to the Sarvastivâdin school Here the Master stopped one year and read the Vibhâshâ and the Nyâya-anusâra, Śâstras, and others

To the south of the capital is a Stûpa, here Buddha in old days preached for three months for the good of Devas and men By the side of it are traces where the past Buddhas walked to and fro On the western borders of this country, south of the river Ganges, is a little solitary hill Here Buddha in old days rested in retreat for three months, and subdued the Yaksha Vakula

South-east of the hill, under a steep precipice, is a great rock, on which are traces of Buddha as he sat on it They are deep in the rock an inch or more, in length 5 feet 2 inches, in breadth 4 feet 1 inch.

There is also a depression in the rock of about an inch where Buddha placed his water-jar It resembles the eight petals of a flower

To the south of this country all is waste and forest There are great elephants there, large in size and of great height.

BOOK IV.

Beginning at Champâ and ending with an Account of the Invitation of the King of Kâmarûpa

FROM this place, following the southern bank of the Ganges in an eastward direction 300 li or so, we come to the kingdom of Champâ There are here some ten Sanghârâmas, with about 300 priests, who study (practise) the Little Vehicle

The city walls are of brick, and several chang in height The ditch round the town is deep and large, so that the place is exceedingly strong

Formerly, at the beginning of the kalpa, men dwelt in caves Afterwards, a divine maiden coming down, as she walked beside the Ganges, bathed herself therein. The divine influence of the river affecting her person, she bore four sons, between whom she divided the whole of Jambudvipa They then traced out the limits of their territory and built cities This was the capital city of one of the sons

Many tens of yôjanas from the southern frontiers of this country, there are great mountain forests, thick and wild, embracing a space of 200 li and more Here are many hundred wild elephants who roam in herds Hence the elephant army of Hiranya and Champâ is very numerous Every now and again they send elephant masters to go round and catch them. In these countries they keep them for drawing carriages (or, riding). Wolves, the rhinoceros, and black leopards [1] are abundant, so men dare not go there.

[1] Such "black leopards" threatened Fa hien on his ascent of the Gridhrakûta hill, near Râjagriha Fa-hien indeed calls them lions, but we

There is a tradition here of the following kind Formerly, before Buddha came into the world, there was a certain cowherd tending several hundred heads of cattle As he drove them, they came into this forest, when a certain ox strayed from the herd by itself alone, and was thus continually away in some unknown place

Towards evening its custom was to return, and on joining the herd it seemed to be of a radiant colour, very remarkable for its beauty, and its bellowings were different from all the others. The rest of the herd always seemed to be afraid of it, and would not venture to come near it. This happened for several days The cowherd, astonished at the circumstance, set a private watch, and at the moment when the ox departed on its wander, he followed and watched it Then he saw it enter a stone door (or, a hole in a rock) The man also followed him and entered After going on about four or five li along a valley, suddenly there was a great light, and a forest park appeared, sparkling with brilliancy, the flowers were numerous and varied; the blossoms and fruit were all shining like flame, dazzling the eye, and contrary to anything in ordinary life

He now saw the ox at a certain place browsing on a herb The herb was of a yellow colour, and highly scented, and such as the man had never seen in the world. The fruit on the trees were yellow and red, like gold; aromatic, and very large. He plucked one of them, but although his heart had coveted its possession, he had not courage to taste it After a little while the ox went out, and the man also followed Scarcely had he got out of the hole in the rock, when in the very passage an evil demon snatched away the fruit and kept it On this the cowherd consulted a all know the Chinese idea of "a lion"—to which indeed Sung Yun refers, there is, however, a sîha-kâla, or "black lion," referred to by Childers sub v sîho great doctor, and described to him the shape of the fruit. The doctor said "You must not eat it at once, but by the use of some stratagem, having taken one, manage to get out, and bring it to me."

On the second day, again following the ox, he entered, and forthwith plucked one of the fruit, and concealing it in his bosom, proceeded to return The demon again met him, to take the fruit away The man then took the fruit and put it in his mouth The demon forthwith seized him by the throat, but the man managed to swallow the fruit Directly it had entered his inside, his whole body began to swell enormously. His head indeed was outside the entrance, but the rest of his body was still within the cavern, so that he could not drag it through the hole

After this his relations began to search for him, and at length, seeing him thus changed in form, they were very much frightened But on going to him, he was still able to speak a few words about his misfortune The friends then returned, and bringing a number of other persons with them, they tried by force of main strength to get him out from where he was fixed But they were not able to move him

The king of the country hearing of the circumstance, himself went to see the man, and fearing some future calamity, he sent some persons to dig him out; but even so they could not move him

Months and years having elapsed, the man was gradually changed into stone, but he still kept his human form.

After this, again, there was a king knowing that it was a fairy fruit that caused the change, addressed his ministers and said. "That man's body was changed by virtue of a medicinal herb, then his body must partake of this medicinal quality; and although apparently he is only a stone, nevertheless his substance must contain in it something spiritual and divine. You must send men with axes and chisels to separate some few fragments from the rock and then bring them to me."

The ministers in obedience to the king's orders despatched master workmen to the place and themselves accompanied them. During ten days they worked with chisels and axes, but were not able to get so much as a fragment of the rock It is still visible

From this, going eastward 400 li or so, we come to the kingdom of Ki-shu-ho-kie-lo (Kajûghîra) Here also he examined and reverenced the sacred traces There are six or seven Sanghârâmas with about 300 priests.

Going east from this and crossing the Ganges, after about 600 li we come to Pu-na-fa-tan-na (Pundravardhana) Here again he paid reverence to the sacred traces. There are about twelve Sanghârâmas here and 3000 priests, belonging to the Small and Great Vehicle

Twenty li or so to the west of the capital is the Po-chi-sha[1] Sanghârâma The towers and balconies are lofty and grand. There are about 700 priests By the side of it is a stûpa, built by Aśôka-râja. Here Tathâgata formerly dwelt for three months preaching the Law The stûpa frequently emits a shining light, moreover there are traces where the four past Buddhas walked up and down

By the side of it there is a Vihâra, in which is a figure of Avalôkiteśvara Bôdhisattva. Whoever prays here with perfect sincerity, is always answered.

Going south-east from this 900 li or so, we come to the country of Kie-lo-na-su-fa-la-na (Karnasuvarna).

There are about ten Sanghârâmas here and 300 priests; they study the Little Vehicle belonging to the Sammatîya school.

Besides these there are two Sanghârâmas where they do not use either butter or milk—this is the traditional teaching of Devadatta.[2]

By the side of the capital is the Sanghârâma called

[1] For po-chi po, vide Records, ii. 195, n. 23.
[2] Vide Records, ii. 201, n. 39.

Ki-to-mo-chi (red mud the Si-yu-ki gives Lo-to-wei-chi, Raktavitî) In old days before this country had heard of the law of Buddha, then a Shaman of South India in his wanderings came here, and having overcome in argument a heretic who wore round his person some copper sheets, on that account the king of the country established this convent [1]

By the side of it is a stûpa built by Aśôka-râja: here Buddha in old times preached for seven days

Going from this south-east we come to the country of Samatata, whose frontiers border on the great sea. The climate is in consequence soft and agreeable There are about twenty Sanghârâmas here, with 3000 priests. They affect the teaching of the Sthavira [2] school The heretics also who worship the spirits of heaven are numerous

Going not far out of the city is a stûpa built by Aśôka-râja, this is the place where in old times Buddha preached the law in favour of Devas and men for seven days

Again going from this a short distance is a Sanghârâma in which is a green-jade figure of Buddha, about eight feet high, its characteristic marks are beautiful and imposing It exhales constantly of itself a delicious perfume, which fills the temple court like that of opening flowers wafted from far. From time to time it emits a heaven-like shining light of the five different colours. Every one seeing or hearing of this wonder, is deeply affected in his religious consciousness.

Going from this north-east along the borders of the sea, across mountains and valleys we come to the country of Chi-li-t'sa-ta-lo (Śrîkshetra); still going south-east, in a bay of the sea, is the country of Kâmalâṅkâ (Pegu), east of this is the country of Dvârapatî (Sandoway); east of this is the country of Iśânapura; east of this is the country of Mahâchampâ (Siam also called Lin-I), west of this is the country of Yen-mo-lo (Yamarâja, but probably a mistake for Yen-mo-na-chau, the country of the Yavanas)[1] These six kingdoms are bordered by mountains and the deep sea. Although Hiuen-Tsiang did not enter their territory, he was yet able to gain knowledge of the customs and manners (of the people).

[1] Records, ii. p. 202. [2] Not, as Julien says, the Sarvâstivâdas

Going from this country of Samatata in a westerly direction about 900 li, we come to the kingdom of Tâmralipti, which lies along a bay of the sea There are some ten Sanghârâmas here, and a congregation of about 1000 priests

By the side of the city is a Stûpa, about 200 feet high, which was built by Aśôka-râja, by the side of it are traces where the four past Buddhas walked to and fro

At this time the Master heard that in the middle of the ocean there was a country called Simhala,[2] it was distinguished for its learned doctors belonging to the Sthavira school, and also for those able to explain the Yoga-śâstra

After a voyage of 700 yojanas, it was possible to reach that country

On hearing about this he inquired of a priest of South India, who, in consultation, told him, as follows: "Those who go to the Simhala country ought not to go by the sea route, during which they will have to encounter the dangers of bad weather (winds), the Yakshas, and rolling waves, you ought rather to go from the south-east point of South India, from which it is a three days' voyage For although in travelling you may have to scale mountains and pass through valleys, yet you are safe. Moreover, you will thus be able to visit Orissa and other countries, and observe the sacred traces.

[1] Vide Records, &c, ii p. 200 [2] The lion-taking country.—Ch. Ed.

The Master of the Law immediately set out in a south-westerly direction towards Orissa (Uda)[1] There are here about 100 Sanghârâmas, and 10,000 priests or so. They study the Great Vehicle. Moreover, there are heretics who worship the powers of heaven, living in mixed society with the others There are about ten Stûpas, all of which were built by Aśôka, they exhibit spiritual indications

The south-eastern frontiers of the country border on the great sea There is a town called Chi-li-ta-lo (Charitra) This is a rendezvous for merchants who embark on the sea, and for others from distant places who travel here and there

At a distance of 20,000 li south,[2] is the country of Simhala. Every night when the sky is clear and without clouds, can be seen at a great distance the glittering rays of the precious gem placed on the top of the Stûpa of the tooth of Buddha, its appearance is like that of a shining star in the midst of space

From this, going south-west and passing through a vast forest about 1200 li, we come to the country of Kong-u-t'o (Konyôdha, Ganjam ?).

From this, going south-west 1400 or 1500 li through a wild forest, we come to the Kie-ling-kia country (Kalinga) There are about ten Sanghârâmas here, occupied by some 500 priests, who study the Law according to the Sthavira school Formerly the population of this country was very dense, but on account of some trouble with a Rishi possessed of the five supernatural powers, who being angry, imprecated ruin and destruction on the kingdom, the population, young and old, perished; afterwards, people from other places gradually migrated here, but even now the population is sparse.

Going north-west from this about 1800 li, we come to Southern Kôsala. The king is of the Kshattriya

[1] Or, Udra vide Records, ii 204. [2] Julien gives 2000.

caste He deeply reverences the law of Buddha, and is well affected towards learning and the arts There are 100 Sanghârâmas here, and 10,000 priests There are a great number of heretics who live intermixed with the population and also Deva temples

Not far to the south is an old Sanghârâma By the side of it is a Stûpa built by Aśôka râja In old days Tathâgata exhibited great spiritual changes in this place and overcame the heretics Afterwards Nâgârjuna Bôdhisattva dwelt here At that time the king of the country was named Sadvâha So-to-p'o-ho, he highly esteemed Nâgârjuna, and abundantly supplied all his wants

At this time Deva Bôdhisattva came from the country of Simhala to seek to discuss on some (religious) difficulties Coming to the door he requested permission to pass through The gate-keeper announced him, on this Nâgârjuna, knowing his name of old, filled a dish full of water and told a disciple to take it and show it to him.

Deva seeing the water, without speaking, cast a needle into it The disciple then brought it back

Nâgârjuna having seen it was full of joy and said: "This water so bright and full is the symbol of my character (qualities). That man who has come and thrown a needle into it, has done so to show that he can investigate these to the bottom if such be the man, I can discuss with him on the dark and mysterious doctrines of religion, and he may hand down the light (lâmp)." He immediately caused him to be brought in, and having seated him, they entered on mutual conversation, as pleasant and agreeable, as the fish finds the water to be. Then Nâgârjuna said. "I am now old and worn out, does the pure, shining orb of Wisdom reside with you (i e are you able to succeed me as Teacher)?"

Deva, rising and reverently bowing at the foot of Nâgârjuna, said· "Although your servant is of small ability yet he will venture to hand down your loving instructions."

In this country there was a Brahman who was skilled in explaining the treatise called In-ming, the Master of the Law remained here a month and some days and read (with him ?) the Tsah-liang-lun

From this, tending southwards, he passed through a great forest, and going some 900 li south-east, he came to the kingdom of Andhra

By the side of the capital is a large Sanghârâma with richly ornamented beams, extensive courts, and its whole appearance venerable and majestic Before it is a stone stûpa several hundred feet high which was constructed by the Arhat Achala

South-west of the Sanghârâma, about twenty li, is an isolated hill on the top of which is a stone stûpa, here the Bodhisattva Ch'in-na (Jina ? or was his name Yuvana jana ?) composed the Śâstra In-ming (Hetuvidyâ ?).

Going about 1000 li to the south of this we come to the kingdom of Dhanakataka To the east of the capital resting against a mountain is a Saṅghârâma called Pûrvaśilâ To the west of the capital resting against a mountain is a Sanghârâma called Avaraśilâ.[1] A former king of this country founded these for Buddha's sake; he thoroughly investigated the rules and patterns of Ta-hia[2] (for constructing such buildings) The woods and fountains flourishing and charming, the spirits of heaven defending and protecting, caused both wise men and holy men, to reside here In the middle of the 1000 years after Buddha's Nirvâna, there were ever laymen and clerics coming here together to keep their religious rest The

[1] I can only surmise that the expression "resting against a mountain" means, that the Saṅghârama was hewn out of the mountain side but vide Records, &c, ii 221 and notes

With respect to the terms Pûrvaśilâ and Avaraśilâ, as denoting two minor schools of the Mahâsaṃghika sect, vide my Travels of Buddhist Pilgrims, p. 143, n

[2] Ta-Hia is constantly used by Taou Sun as equivalent to North India, or, that part of North west India, conquered by the Yue-ti. Mr Kingsmill restores Ta-hia to Tocharia, which may be correct, but is vague I believe the reference to the text is to the Stûpas erected in North-West India, by the Indo-Scythians (so called).

season of rest being past, all who were Arhats would mount into space and depart After the 1000 years, both laymen and holy men lived together here, but for 100 years or so the Mountain Spirit changing itself (into various shapes) has caused great annoyance, and the religious people (those practising religion) have all been so alarmed that they no longer come or go Hence the place is now entirely waste and desert, without either priest or novice.

Not far to the south of the capital is a great stone mountain, this is where the Master of Sâstras Bhâvavivêka rests in the palace of the Asuras awaiting the time when Maitrêya Bôdhisattva shall reach perfect wisdom, and shall then explain some difficulties in his way

The Master of the Law, whilst in this country, met with two priests, the first named Subhûti, the second Sûrya both of them eminent for explaining the Tripitaka according to the Mahâsañghika school.

The Master of the Law on this account remained there several months studying the Mûlâbhidharma and other śâstras, according to the Mahâsañghika school[1] They also studied the various śâstras of the Great Vehicle under the direction of the Master of the Law And so becoming bound together in mind they all went in company to pay reverence to the sacred traces of their religion

Going from this about 1000 li to the south we come to the kingdom of Chulya

South-east of the capital is a stûpa built by Aśôka râja This is the spot where in old days Buddha, when in this district, exhibited great spiritual prodigies and overcame the heretics, preaching the Law for the conversion of Devas and men.

[1] It seems evident that these Sañghârâmas, in the neighbourhood of Amrâvti, were built by the followers of the Mâhâsamghika sect, which is distinctly opposed to the Sthavira sect of Ceylon

To the west of the capital is an old Sanghârâma, this is the place where the Dêva Bôdhisattva discussed with the Arhat Uttara After the seventh round of questions the Arhat gave no further answer, but by the exercise of his supernatural faculties, he passed into the Tuśita heaven, and there asked Mâitreya Bôdhisattva respecting his difficulties The Bôdhisattva gave him the explanations required, and then, taking advantage of the occasion, addressed him thus "That Deva, having a long accumulated store of merit, will, during this Bhadra Kalpa, perfect himself in the highest wisdom You must not treat him lightly" Having returned to the spot he now undertook to explain the former difficulties The Deva said "This is the reasoning of Mâitreya Bôdhisattva and not your own, and your wisdom is derived from him"

The Arhat, filled with confusion, confessed his inferiority, and paying him reverence left the place.

Going south from this through a great forest some 1500 or 1600 li, we come to the kingdom of Drâvida, the chief capital of this kingdom is named Kânchîpura; this was the birthplace of Dharmapâla Bôdhisattva He was the son of a great minister of this kingdom As a child he exhibited wonderful wisdom After he had assumed the virile cap, the king, enamoured by his talent, wished to give him a princess of his family in marriage The Bôdhisattva, who had long disciplined himself to reject sensual pleasures, had no mind to incur the pollutions of love, on the evening preceding the consummation of the marriage he was overcome with feelings of grief and despondency, and betook himself to an image of Buddha before which he offered up his prayers and besought his protection and deliverance from his present difficulties, and this he did with all his heart

There was a great king of the spirits who (in consequence) transported him by his power several hundred li from the city. He deposited him in a mountain convent, in the middle of the hall of Buddha. The priests coming in and seeing him there, agreed together that he was a thief. The Bôdhisattva himself related his adventure, on which his auditors were filled with astonishment and could not but admire his high resolve He now entered the religious life, and applied himself thereafter with all his powers to the practice of the true Law In consequence he was able to penetrate the meaning of all the schools, and to exercise himself in the art of religious composition He drew up the following works. the Śabdavidyâ-samyukta-śâstra, in 25,000 ślôkas, a commentary on the Śataśâstra-vâyulyam, on the Vidyâmâtra-siddhi, and on the Nyâya dvâra-târaka-śâstra—altogether several tens of books very extended and highly significant of his eminent virtue and great talent There is, moreover, a personal narrative of his history

The city of Kânchîpura is situated on the mouth (bay) of the southern sea of India, looking towards the kingdom of Simhala, distant from it three days' voyage

In the interval (before the Master of the Law left this kingdom) the king of Simhala died the country was at that time suffering from famine and in a state of disorder, there were two eminent priests there called Bôdhimêghêśvara and Abhayadanshtra

These two with 300 other priests, coming to India, arrived at Kânchîpura

The Master of the Law, having obtained an interview with them, asked them as follows "It is reported that the chief priests of your kingdom are able to explain the Tripitaka according to the Sthavira school, and also the Yôga-śâstra I am anxious to go there and study these books May I ask why you have come to this place?" In reply, they said "The king of our country is dead and the people are suffering from famine, without any resource for help We heard that Jambudvîpa possessed abundance of food and was at peace and settled This, too, is the place of Buddha's birth, and full of sacred traces of his presence for this reason we have come Moreover, among the members of our school who know the Law there are none who excel ourselves as to age and position, if you have any doubts therefore, let us, according to your will, speak together about these things"

The Master of the Law then gave examples of choice passages of the Yoga-śâstra, both long and short sections, but they were not able to explain any of them as Śîlabhadra did [1]

It is reported that 3000 li or so from the frontiers of this kingdom is the country of Malakûta, as it borders on the sea-coast it is exceedingly abundant in different gems.

To the east of its chief town is a stûpa built by Aśôka-râja This is the spot where in old days Tathâgata preached the Law and exhibited many spiritual changes, for the conversion of an innumerable company of persons

To the south of this kingdom bordering on the sea is Malayagiri, with its precipices and ravines, towering upwards and lying deep. Here is found the white sandal-scented tree, the Chandanêva tree This tree is like the white poplar Its substance being of a cold nature, many kinds of snakes frequent the trees during summer, but in the winter they conceal themselves in the ground Thus this kind of sandal tree is distinguished.

Again there is the Karpûra scented tree It is like the pine in its trunk, but leaves different, as also its blossoms and fruit When the tree is cut down and full of sap, it has no scent, but when it has been cut down and dry, then dividing it through the middle there is found the scented portion, in appearance like mother of pearl and of the colour of congealed snow. This is what is called Dragon-brain scent (camphor).

Again, it is reported that on the north-east by the

[1] The Yoga system was probably unknown, or slightly known, in Ceylon It was a late development of Buddhism border of the sea is a city, and from the city, going south-east 3000 li or so, we come to the country of Simhala.

The circuit of this country is about 7000 li and its capital about forty li round It is thickly populated and produces an abundance of grain. The people are black, small of stature, and very impulsive such is their character

The country was originally called Po chu, having many gems of a rare character Afterwards there was a woman of South India betrothed to one of a neighbouring kingdom, who on her journey met with a lion-king The servants and the attendants, filled with fear, were scattered here and there, leaving the woman alone in the palanquin The lion approaching, bore the woman far away Entering the deep mountains he gathered fruits and chased the game in order to provide her with food After a captivity of some years she gave birth to a son and daughter, in appearance like human beings, nevertheless of a hot and violent temper

The youth having grown up addressed his mother thus, "Of what kind am I?—my father a beast, my mother a human being" The mother then recounted to him the old history, for his information

The son said, in reply "Since men and beasts are of two different kinds, why not leave him and keep a mutual guard, one against the other?"

The mother said "I have no disinclination to do so, only I see no method of escape"

The son then followed his father as he passed over mountains and through valleys, and observed his route, then on another day, taking advantage of his father's absence, he carried off his mother and sister to a neighbouring village Then arriving at the native country of his mother, he inquired after her male relatives, but found they were all extinct. They then sought refuge in a neighbouring village

The lion-king returning and not finding his wife and children, filled with fury left the forest angrily roaring, and destroyed many women and men of the villages, as he roamed to and fro.

The people informed the king of these facts, and he collected the four kinds of troops, the most courageous he had, to surround (the lion) and kill him with their arrows The lion having observed this, uttered the most dreadful roars, and frightened both men and horses, so no one dared to attack him

So many days passed without any result. The king then issued another proclamation promising a hundred thousand gold pieces to any one who could slay the lion.

Then the son spake to his mother thus: "The cold and want we suffer are sad calamities I will respond to the invitation of the king—what think you?"

The mother said: "It is impossible, for although he is a beast, yet he is your father, and if you should kill him, how can you claim the name of a man?"

The son said: "Unless I follow out my plan he will certainly not go away: and whilst he is pursuing and following us he may enter the village, and then some morning the king will know of our return, and our death will not be long deferred What then? The lion by his fury is a source of disaster, and it will befall us also How can it be that for the sake of one, many should suffer loss? I have thought over it again and again, it ought not to be so, I must comply with the request."

So he went out (to attack the lion)! The lion when he saw him was subdued in manner, and was full of joy he cast off all evil designs of slaughter The son taking a knife cut his throat and rent his belly Although agonised with suffering the lion still retained his love and deep affection, and bore his pain patiently and never moved till he died

The king hearing of the lion's death, was rejoiced, but on account of the strangeness of the circumstances, he inquired as to the cause (of the son's conduct).

At first he prevaricated, but being hardly pressed, he was betrayed at last into a confession of the truth.

The king hearing it exclaimed "Psha! who except one born of a beast could have had such a heart? Although I shall not recede from my first promise as to the reward; yet as you have shown yourself to be a man guilty of the crime of a parricide, you may no longer remain in this country"

He then directed the magistrates to give him abundance of gold and precious jewels, and afterwards to drive him into banishment

Accordingly they equipped two ships, in which they placed a quantity of gold and treasure of all sorts, and provisions. Having conducted them[1] to the mid ocean they then let them drift at the mercy of the tide The ship containing the young man, after beating about a long while, arrived at Po-chu, where, seeing the abundance of its rare productions, he resolved to stay.

Afterwards merchantmen with their family connections came there in search of jewels, and took up their abode in his neighbourhood. On this he killed the merchants and detained their wives and daughters. Thus the children and grandchildren increased through many generations, and when the population became by degrees very numerous, they elected a ruler and ministers, and because their distant ancestor had captured and slain the lion, they called their country (by its name, Simhala)

The ship which carried the girl, after beating about at sea, came to the western parts of Persia. Falling into the hands of demons who dwell there, she gave birth to a number of daughters, and this is now the country of the Western women.

But it is also said that Simhala is the name of a merchant's son, who by his rare wisdom escaped from the murderous purpose of the Raksha demons, and afterwards, being elected king, came to this Po-chu island and slew the Rakshas, and established his capital in the country. Hence the name, as narrated in the Si-yu-ki.[1]

[1] That is, the brother and sister.

This kingdom in former days was without the law of Buddha One hundred years after the Nirvâna of Tathâgata, the younger brother of Aśôka-râja, Mahêndra by name, giving up and rejecting the pleasures of life, taking with him four[2] Śramanas, forthwith travelling here and there through space, came to convert this country In order to exhibit and exalt the teaching of Buddha, he manifested his miraculous powers. The people of the country, full of faith and admiration, founded a Saṅghârâma At present there are some hundred such foundations, with 10,000 priests They follow the teaching of the Great Vehicle, and belong to the school of the Sthaviras The lay disciples are grave and respectful, following the directions of the moral code with intelligence and zeal, stimulating one another to mutual diligence

By the side of the king's palace is the Vihâra of Buddha's tooth, several hundred feet high It is decorated with every kind of precious substance On the top of it is erected a signal staff, which is surmounted by a great ruby (Padmarâga jewel), and fixed to the tee[3] Its brilliant sparkling lights up the heaven, and on a clear and cloudless night it can be seen by those who are even 10,000 li distant.

By the side of this is another Vihâra decorated with every kind of gem. Within this building is a golden statue made by a former king of the country, in the tiara of which is a precious gem of incalculable value. In after times there was a man who wished to steal this jewel. The place, however, was so well guarded and watched that he could not get inside He then excavated a subterranean passage and so entered the building When he was just going to take the gem the figure gradually grew higher, so that the robber was not able to reach it Then as he went away, he said "Tathâgata, when he practised the discipline of a Bôdhisattva in former days, did not grudge to sacrifice his life for the sake of all flesh, nor did he scruple to give up his country or his (native) city—how comes it then that he is now niggard in his gifts? We fear that these reports about him are not true" The image, on this, bent himself down and gave the jewel The thief having taken it, went forth and proposed to sell it But the men who saw it and recognised it, seized the robber and brought him to the king The king demanded how he got the gem He replied, Buddha himself gave it me—and he related the whole transaction The king on his part, seeing the head of the image bent downwards, perceived that the event was spiritual and sacred, and so his faith was greatly deepened, and he gave the robber all kinds of gems and precious substances in exchange for the (stolen) jewel Then taking it back he replaced it on the tiara of the image, and there it still is.

[1] Records, II 240 [2] Dipavamsa, XII. § 25.
[3] The Khettiya, or graduated spire.

At the south-east corner of the country is Lañkâgiri. Many dêvas and associates of evil spirits dwell here. Tathâgata in old time delivered the Lañkâvatâra Sûtra on this mountain.

To the south of the country, many thousand li across the ocean, is the island called Nârikîra. The men of this island are small of stature, about three feet in height, they have the bodies of men, but with beaks like birds. They have no grain-food, but live on cocoa-nuts

This country [1] being too remote, and separated by an expanse of sea, the Master was not able to visit it himself, but has related in detail all that he heard from men's mouths. .

[1] i e Sunha'a

From Drâvida he went north-west in company with about seventy priests from Simhala, and visited the sacred traces for the purpose of reverent observation

After going about 2000 li, we come to Kin-na-po-lo[1] [Kongkanapura] There are about 100 Sanghârâmas here, and 10,000 priests belonging both to the Great and Little Vehicle The heretics who practise the worship of Dêvas are also very numerous

By the side of the royal palace precincts is a large Sanghârâma with about 300 resident priests, all of them greatly reverenced for their literary talents In this Vihâra is a precious head-dress[2] of the Prince Siddhârtha about two feet high, it is preserved in a richly adorned casket Every religious fast day it is taken out and placed on a high pedestal, those who offer it sincerest reverence, frequently see it lit up with radiance

In a Sanghârâma by the side of the city is a Vihâra in which is a carved sandal-wood figure of Maîtreya Bôdhisattva, about ten feet high This, also, frequently glistens with radiance It is said that twenty million Arhats carved the image

To the north of the city is a forest of Talas trees, about thirty li in circuit The leaves of this tree are long, and of a shining appearance The people of these countries use them for writing on,[3] and they are highly valued.

From this, going north-west, we pass through a great forest which is infested with savage animals and desert; after 2400 or 2500 li, we come to the kingdom of Mahârâshtra The people of this country despise death, and highly esteem right conduct.

The king is of the Kshattriya caste. He is fond of military affairs, and boasts of his arms In this country, therefore, the troops and cavalry are carefully equipped,

[1] For, Kong-kin-na-po-lo

[2] Julien gives "the statue of the Prince," but it is not so in the text.

[3] Hence it is sometimes called the Pei-to, i. e. the leaf (patra) tree.

and the rules of warfare thoroughly understood and observed. Whenever a general is despatched on a warlike expedition, although he is defeated and his army destroyed, he is not himself subjected to bodily punishment, only he has to exchange his soldier's dress for that of a woman, much to his shame and chagrin. So, many times, those men put themselves to death to avoid such disgrace. The king always supports several thousand men of valour, and several hundred savage elephants. When these are drawn up in battle array, then they give them intoxicating spirits to drink, till they are overpowered with it—and then at a given signal, when in this condition, they excite them to rush against (the enemy). His foes are thus without fail put to flight. Relying on these advantages, he holds in contempt all the frontier powers that contend with him for the mastery.

Śîlâditya râja, boasting of his skill and the invariable success of his generals, filled with confidence himself, marched at the head of his troops to contend with this prince—but he was unable to prevail or subjugate him [1]

There are about 100 Sañghârâmas here, and 5000 priests, who belong to the Great and Little Vehicle promiscuously. There are also followers of the heretics who worship the Dêvas, and cover themselves with ashes

Within and outside the capital there are five Stûpas, all of them several hundred feet (in height) These were built by Aśôka-râja, as mementos of the places where the four past Buddhas had walked to and fro.

From this kingdom, going north-west a thousand li or so, crossing the river Ni-mo-to (Narmmadâ), we come to the kingdom of Po-lu-kie-chen-po (Baroche).

From this, going north-west about 2000 li, we come to the country of Mo-la-p'o (Mâlava).[1] The people of this country in their manner are polished and agreeable. They exceedingly love the fine arts In all the five Indies, Mâlava on the south-west, and Magadha on the north-east alone have the renown of loving the study of literature, of honouring virtue (or goodness), and of polite language and finished conversation

[1] Vide Records, vol. ii. p 256 The Prince's name was Pulakeśi.

There are about 100 Sañghârâmas in this country, with 20,000 priests who study the Small Vehicle and belong to the Sammatîya school There are also heretics who cover themselves with ashes and worship the host of Dêvas Tradition says Sixty years before this there was a king called Śilâditya,[2] of high talent and singular learning He was humane, affectionate, generous, and sweetly attached to his people He was from the first supremely reverent to the doctrine of the three precious ones, and from the time he became king to his death no improper word had proceeded from his mouth, nor had his face ever flushed with passion

His thoughts towards his ministers and his wives were always tender, nor would he even injure a fly or an ant He caused the water given to his horses and elephants first to be strained and then to be given them, lest he should destroy the life of a water insect He impressed on the chief people of the kingdom to avoid taking life, and hence the beasts of the desert became attached to men, and the wolves ceased to be injurious All the occupants within his borders were quiet, and the indications of good fortune daily presented themselves. He constructed temporary residences on the largest and grandest scale, and made figures of the seven Buddhas. He also convoked the assembly called "Môksha (Mahâ-parishad)"

Thus for fifty years he continued on the throne carrying out these most excellent works without cessation;

[1] Vide Records, II 260

[2] This was Śilâditya of Ujjain, Records, I. 108, n. 91.

and he thus endeared himself to his people, and his memory is still revered

Twenty li or so to the north-west of the capital by the side of Brâhmanapura (the city of the Brâhmans) is a deep ditch, this is the place where a great arrogant Brâhman when he abused the Great Vehicle with a view to its destruction, went down alive into hell, as is related in the Su-yu-ki[1]

From this, going north-west 2400 or 2500 li, we come to the kingdom of O-ch'a-li (Atali) This district produces the Hu-tsian tree, the leaves of which are like those of the pepper-tree of Sz'chuen It also produces the Hiun-lu (Tagara (Jul)) perfume tree, the leaves of which are like those of the Thang-li (the mountain ash).

From this, going north-west three days, we come to the kingdom of K'ie Ch'a. About 1000 li to the north of this we come to the kingdom of Fa-la-pi (Vallabhî). There are about 100 Sanghârâmas here, and 6000 priests who study the Little Vehicle, according to the Sammatîya school

Tathâgata when alive frequently sojourned in this country Aśôka-râja erected distinguishing mementos in all the places where Buddha stopped. The present king belongs to the Kshattriya caste, he is son-in-law (nü sai) of Śîlâditya râja of the kingdom of Kanyâkubja; his name is Dhruvabhata[2] He is of a quick and impulsive nature, and his manners are heavy and dull, but yet he esteems virtue and advances learning. He is faithfully attached to the three treasures, and every year he assembles a great gathering, and for seven days he entertains priests from all countries and bestows on them

[1] Records, II. 264

[2] This name is explained in the Su-yu-ki by the symbols for "ever intelligent" = Dhruvabaṭṭa, but in the Text it is translated "Royal helmet," probably a mistake for "ever helmeted" or "armed" = Dhṛuvabhata. Vide Records, II. 267, n. 73.

food of the best description, choice jewels, bedding and clothes, with varieties of medicaments and other things of different kinds.

From this, going north-west about 700 li, we come to the country of Ânandapura.

Again, going 500 li or so to the north-west, we come to the kingdom of La-su-c'ha (for Su-la-c'ha), (Surashṭra).

From this, going north-east 1800 li, we come to the country of Kiu-che-lo (Gurjjara)

Again, going south-east 2800 li or so, we come to the country of U-che-yen-na (Ujjayanî) Not far from the capital is a stûpa; this is the spot where Aśôka-râja constructed his (place of punishment called) Hell [1]

From this, going north-east about 1000 li, we come to the country of Chi-ki-to.

From this, going north-east 900 li or so, we come to the kingdom of Mahêśvarapura

From this, going back in a westerly direction, we again come to the country of Suratha

Going hence to the west we come to the kingdom of O-tin-p'o-chi-lo (Atyanabakêla). When Tathâgata was alive he repeatedly sojourned in this country, and Aśôka râja has raised stûpas on all the spots he visited (left sacred traces), all of which still exist

From this, going west about 2000 li, we come to the country of Lang-kie-lo (Langala), which lies near the Great Sea, towards the country of the Western women.

From this, going north-west, we come to the country of Po-la-sse (Persia), which is not within the boundaries of India It is said that this territory abounds in pearls and precious substances, in silken brocades and wool, sheep, horses, and camels There are two or three Sanghârâmas here, with some hundred disciples, who study the Little Vehicle, according to the school of the [1] But cf p 102 The story must have been carried from Magadha into Mâlava.

Sarvâstavâdins. The pâtra of Sâkya Buddha is at present in the royal palace of this country On the eastern frontier is the city of Ho-mo (Ormuz), the north-west borders on the country of Fo-lin.[1] On the south-west, on an island, is the country of the Western women. These women have no male children among them, but the country abounds with precious substances, it is tributary to Fo-lin The king of Fo-lin every year sends men to cohabit with the women, but whatever male children are born, they do not rear them

Again, going north-east from the kingdom of Lângala, about 700 li, we come to the kingdom of Pi-to-shi-lo (Pitâśilâ) Here is a stûpa, several hundred feet high, which was built by Aśôka-râja It contains relics which often emit a brilliant light When Tathâgata was formerly born as a Rishi, he was slain here by the cruelty of the king of the country.

From this, going north-east about 300 li, we come to the kingdom of O-fan-ch'a (Avanda) North-east of the capital, in a great forest, are the ruins of a Sanghârâma Buddha, when formerly living in this place, permitted the Bhikshus to wear Kih-fuh-to[2] (leather boots) There is a stûpa built by Aśôka râja; by the side of it is a vihâra, in which is a standing figure of Buddha, made of blue stone, which frequently emits a brilliant light

South of this, about 800 paces in a large forest, there is a stûpa, which was built by Aśôka-râja Tathâgata, in old days, was stopping on this spot, when, the night being cold, he wrapped himself up in three garments, one over the other. When the morning came, he gave permission to the Bhikshus to wear quilted garments.[3]

Going from this eastwards 700 li or so, we come to the country of Sin-tu (Sindh). This country produces

[1] Probably Ba(bylon)
[2] Records, II 280, n. 97.
[3] 納 for 衲

gold, silver, calamine stone (t'au shih), oxen, sheep, camels, red salt, white salt, black salt, &c

This last kind of salt is used in different places for making medicines. Tathâgata when alive, frequently sojourned in this country, whatever sacred traces of his presence there are, Aśôka-râja has built stûpas on those spots as mementos. There are also here traces of the great Arhat Upagupta, who sojourned here whilst engaged in the conversion of men

From this, going east 900 li or so, crossing the river[1] to its eastern bank, we come to Mu-lo-san-po-la (Mûlasthânapura or Multân, Si-yu-ki, ii 274) The people sacrifice to the gods and worship U-fa-tsun (Âdityа ?),[2] that is, the Sun[3]-God His image is cast out of yellow gold, and adorned with every kind of precious stone People from all neighbouring countries come here to offer their prayers The flowery woods, the tanks and ponds, the tastefully arranged tiles, the surrounding steps, all these, when viewed as a pleasurable sight, cannot but inspire feelings of admiration.

From this, going north-east 700 li or so, we come to the kingdom of Po-fa-to-lo[4] (Parvata) By the side of the capital is a great Sañghârâma, with about 100 priests, all of whom study the Great Vehicle. It was here Jinaputra, Master of Śâstras, formerly composed the Yogâchârya-bhûmi-śâstra-kârikâ Here, also, the Master of Śâstras, Bhadraruchi, and the Master of Śâstras, Gunaprabha, originally became disciples

Because this country had two or three leading priests whose claims for learning might serve for guidance, the Master of the Law stopped here two years[5] and studied

[1] 𑖪𑖽 for 𑖪𑖽

[2] I should think rather a Persian, than a Sanscrit word, is to be sought here.

[3] The symbol in the text is doubtful But I take it for "Jih," the sun.

[4] For, Po lo fa-to [5] Julien has months.

the Mulâbhidharma-śâstra and the Saddharma-Samipâri-graha-śâstra, and the Prasikshâ-satya-śâstra, as received in the Sammatîya school

From this, returning again by a south-east[1] route to Magadha, the Master arrived at the Nâlanda monastery There he paid his respects to the priest called Ching-tă-tsong, after which he heard that to the west of this place about three yôjanas there was a convent called Tiladaka, where lived a renowned priest called Prajñabhadra, a native of Fo-lo-po-ti (Bâlapati ?), who had embraced the religious life in the school of the Sarvâstavâdins

This man had distinguished himself by his knowledge of the three Pitakas, and of the Śabdavidyâ and the Hetuvidyâ śâstras, and others

The Master of the Law having remained here for two months, closely questioned him about matters on which he had doubts

From this he went again to the hill called Yashtivana, and stopped with a householder who was a native of Suratha and a Kshattriya by caste — his name was Jayasena, a writer of Śâstras. As a youth he was given to study, and first under Bhadraruchi, Master of Śâstras, he had studied the Hetuvidyâ-śâstra, then under Sthitamati Bôdhisattva, he had studied the Śabdavidyâ śâstra (and others), belonging to the Great and Little Vehicle Again under Śilabhadra, Master of the Law, he had studied the Yoga-śâstra.

'And then again, with respect to the numerous productions of secular (outside) writers the four Vedas, works on astronomy and geography, on the medicinal art, magic and arithmetic, he had completely mastered these from beginning to end he had exhausted these inquiries root (leaf) and branch, he had studied all of them both within and without. His acquirements (virtue) made him the admiration of the period.

Purnavarma râja, lord of Magadha, had great respect

[1] Julien gives North-East.

for learned men, and honoured those distinguished as sages· hearing of this man's renown, he was much pleased, and sent messengers to invite him to come to his court, and nominated him "Kwo-sse" (Master of the Kingdom), and assigned for his support the revenue of twenty large towns. But the Master of Śâstras declined to receive them

After the obsequies of Purnavarma, Śîlâditya râja also invited him to be "the Master (of the country)," and assigned him the revenue of eighty large towns of Orissa But again the Master declined the offer The king still urged him repeatedly to acquiesce, but he as firmly refused. Then addressing the king he said "Jaya-asêna has heard, that he who receives the emoluments of the world (men), also is troubled with the concerns of life, but now my object is to teach the urgent character of the fetters of birth and death, how is it possible then to find leisure to acquaint myself with the concerns of the king?"

So saying, he respectfully bowed and went away, the king being unable to detain him

From that time he has constantly lived on the mountain called Yashtivana, where he takes charge of disciples, teaching and leading them on to persevere, and expounding the books of Buddha The number of laymen and priests (religious persons) who honour him as their Master is always a large one, amounting to several hundred

The Master of the Law remained with him first and last for two years, and studied a treatise on the difficulties of the Vidyâ-matra-siddhi śâstra, the I-i-li-lun, the Shing-wu-wai-lun, the pih-chu-ni-pan-shih-i-yin-un-lun, the chwong-yan-king-lun, and he also asked explanations of passages in the Yôga and the Hetuvidyâ śâstras which yet caused him doubt.

When this was done he unexpectedly dreamt in the night and saw all the chambers and courts of the Nâlanda monastery deserted and foul, moreover, there were nought but water buffaloes fastened in them, with no priests or followers. The Master of the Law entering through the Western gate of the hall of Bâlâditya râja, beheld on the top of the four-storeyed pavilion a golden-coloured man, of a grave and imposing countenance, whilst a glorious light shone within the entire abode His mind was overjoyed, and he wished to ascend to the top, but he found no way to do so, he then besought him to reach down and lift him up—but he replied "I am Manjuśrî Bôdhisattva, your karma does not yet admit of (such a privilege)"—and then pointing to the outside of the convent, he said "Do you see that?" The Master of the Law looking in the direction indicated by his finger, saw a fierce fire burning without the convent, and consuming to ashes villages and towns Then the golden figure said "You should [1] return soon, for after ten years Śîlâditya râja will be dead,[2] and India be laid waste and in rebellion, wicked men will slaughter one another, remember these words of mine!" After he had finished, he disappeared

The Master of the Law when he awoke, filled with pleasurable emotion, went to Jayasêna and told him of his dream Jayasêna said "There is no rest in the entire world (the three worlds) it is quite possible it may be, as you have heard in your dream, but as you have received the intimation, the responsibility is yours you must use your own expedient" From this may be gathered, that whatever good men (great students) do, all is watched over by Bôdhisattvas When thinking of going from India—then it was told to [3] Śîlabhadra and he detained me When still delaying and not going back, then I was told of the fact of death, by way of exhortation to return If my conduct were not in agreement with the holy mind (of the Bôdhisattva) how could this have happened?

[1] Kwei tsz' chü = go from here
[2] For a full examination of this subject, vide Max Muller's India, p. 286.
[3] p 146, Jul —Supra, p. 108.

So towards the end of the Yung Hwei[1] period (i.e. about 654-5, A D), Śîlâditya râja died, and India was subjected to famine and desolation, as had been predicted. The imperial ambassador, Wang-un-tse, was at this time making ready to be a witness of these things[2] It was now the beginning of the first month.

It is in this same month, according to the rules of the Western country, they bring forth from the Bôdhi convent (viz, at Gâya) the Śarîras of Buddha Both laymen and priests from all countries come together to witness the spectacle, and to worship. The Master of the Law, therefore, with Jayasêna both went to see the relic-bones. These are both great and small The large ones are like a round pearl, bright and glistening, and of a reddish-white colour There are also flesh-relics, large as a bean, and in appearance shining red An innumerable multitude of disciples offered incense and flowers, after ascribing praises and offering worship they take (the relics) back and place them in the Tower (stûpa)

At the end of the first watch of the night, Jayasêna and the Master of the Law were discoursing about the inequality as to size of the different Śarîras Then Jayasêna said, "Your disciple has seen in different places śarîras (only) as large as rice grains, how happens it then that these are so large? Venerable sir! have you any doubts on this point?"

Hiuen-Tsiang replied, "I share your doubts in this matter"

After a little while the light of the lamps in the building was suddenly eclipsed, and within and without there was a supernatural illumination produced On looking out they saw the relic-tower bright and effulgent as the sun, whilst from its summit proceeded a lambent flame of five colours, reaching to the sky. Heaven and earth were flooded with light, the moon and stars were no longer seen, and a subtle perfume seemed to breathe through and fill the courts and the precincts

[1] This period lasted to 656 A D
[2] That is, the embassy from China to India now being prepared.

Then it was noised abroad, from one to the other, that the śarîras were exhibiting a mighty miracle All the multitude, being cognizant of it, came together, and again offered their adoration, and spoke in rapture of the wonderful sight By degrees the light grew less and less, and when at the last moment it was about to die out, it seemed to encircle the dome of the tower several times, and then it was absorbed (as it were) within (the tower) And now heaven and earth were again wrapped in darkness, and the different stars once more appeared All who witnessed this miracle were freed from doubts.[1]

They then paid worship to the Bôdhi tree, and also to the sacred vestiges, and eight days having passed they returned once more to the Nâlanda monastery

At this time the Master of Śâstras, Śîlabhadra, deputed the Master of the Law to expound to the congregation the Mahâyâna-samparigraha-śâstra, and comments on the difficulties of the Vidyâ-matra-siddhi-śâstra.

At the same time an eminent priest named Simharasmi[2] had been explaining for the sake of the fraternity (the four classes) the Prânyamûla-śâstra and the Śata-śâstra, newly arranged, the object of which was to refute the principles of the Yôga

The Master of the Law had, in the best of spirit, opposed the Prânyamûla and Śata-Śâstra, and approved of the Yôga, with the opinion that the illustrious (holy) men, who founded these doctrines, each followed one thought, and were not mutually at variance, or opposed; and if they cannot be quite reconciled, he said, yet these are not contradictory, and the fault is with their successors, but this cannot bar the truth of the Law.

[1] It is curious to find from these accounts, the prevalence of such "pious frauds" in India at this time.

[2] I adopt this rendering from Julien, my copy has sz', "part of an army," and not sz', "a lion."

From a feeling of pity for the narrow views of this doctor, the Master of the Law frequently went to question and to correct his opinions But he was unable to induce him to reply From this circumstance his disciples gradually left him, and attached themselves to the Master of the Law

Hiuen-Tsiang aimed by the assertions of the Pranyamûla and Śata-śâstras simply to overthrow the conclusions of the Sañkhya, but said nothing about a self-derived or external nature, or the perfectly complete true nature (of Buddha)—but yet Simharasmi could not grasp the argument nor consent to its truth He affirmed only the proposition "yih-tsai-wu-sho-teh," ("all things without attainment"),[1] and he affirmed that the conclusion of the Yôga in reference to the complete, perfect, and true (nature), &c, was an error, and this was the uniform position he took up in argument

The Master of the Law, in order to reconcile the two doctrines,[2] affirming that they were not contradictory, composed a śâstra which he called Hwui-Tsung in 3000 ślôkas. When finished he presented it to Śîlabhadra and the great congregation All spoke approvingly of it, and it is generally accepted for study (practice)

Simharasmi, filled with shame, forthwith left the convent and went to the Bôdhi monastery (at Gâya). There he privately requested a fellow-student of his, one Chandrasimha of Eastern India, to come with him and discuss these difficult points of doctrine, and so relieve him from his former disgrace But when this man came he was faint-hearted and silent, and did not dare to say a word. Thus the fame of the Master of the Law increased greatly.

Before Simharasmi had departed Śîlâditya-râja had

[1] i.e "that nothing is to be attained by effort," this proposition is the opposite of yih-tsai-yeou sho-teh

[2] Viz, 1st, that there is nothing to be attained by effort, and 2nd, that we may attain the one true nature [by Yôga] constructed a Vihâra covered with brass plates by the side of the Nâlanda monastery, about a hundred feet in height It was renowned through all countries

The king after returning from the subjugation of Koñyodha (Ganjam ?) came to Orissa The priests of this country all study the Little Vehicle, and do not believe in the Great Vehicle. They say it is a system of the "sky-flower" heretics, and was not delivered by Buddha

When they saw the king after his arrival, they entered into conversation and said "We hear that the king has built by the side of the Nâlanda convent a Vihâra of brass, a work magnificent and admirable But why did not your majesty construct a Kâpâlika temple, or some other building of that sort?"

The king answered. "What mean you by these words of reproach?"

In reply, they said "The Monastery of Nâlanda and its 'sky-flower'[1] doctrine is not different from the Kâpâlika sect this is our meaning"

Before this a consecrated king of South India had a teacher, an old Brâhman, whose name was Prajñagupta, who was well versed in the doctrine of the Sammatîya school. This man composed a treatise in 700 ślôkas against the Great Vehicle All the teachers of the Little Vehicle were rejoiced thereat, and taking the book showed it to the king, and said "This represents our doctrine: is there a man of the other school that can upset one single word of it?"

The king said "I have heard of the fox, accompanied by the meadow rats, boasting he was able to contend with the lion, but as soon as he saw him, then his heart failed him and they were all scattered in a moment You, sirs, have not yet seen the priests of the Great Vehicle, and so you firmly maintain your foolish principles If you once

[1] The sky flower doctrine is fully explained in the Śuraṅgama Sûtra It was evidently a doctrine developed in the Nâlanda monastery, as this Sûtra was framed there The doctrine is simply that all objective phenomena are only, like sky flowers, unreal and vanishing.

see them—affrighted, you will, I fear, then, be the same as that (fox)

Then they answered "If there be any doubt on the king's part about the matter, why not assemble a conference and let there be a close investigation, as to right and wrong?"

The king said "And what difficulty is there in this?"

So on that very day he sent a messenger with a letter to the Nâlanda convent to Śîlabhadra, the Master of the Law, surnamed "the treasure of the true doctrine," (Saddharma piṭaka?), in which he said "Your servant, whilst progressing through Orissa, met some priests of the Little Vehicle who, hampered by contracted views, adhere to a śâstra which abuses the principles of the Great Vehicle They speak of the followers of that system as men of a different religion, and they wish to hold a controversy with you on this point Now I know that in your convent there are eminent priests and exceedingly gifted, of different schools of learning, who will undoubtedly be able to overthrow them—so now, in answer to their challenge, I beg you to send four men of eminent ability, well acquainted with one and the other school, and also with the esoteric and exoteric doctrine, to the country of Orissa"

When Śîlabhadra had received the letter, he assembled the congregation, and after inquiry, he selected Sâgaramati, Prajñârasmi, Simharasmi, and the Master of the Law, as the four men in reply to the king's mandate. When Sâgaramati and the others were anxious about the result, the Master of the Law said, "Hiuen-Tsiang, Master of the three pitakas, when residing in his own (or, my own) country, and also when he resided in Kaśmir, thoroughly examined all the schools of learning belonging to the Little Vehicle. Those separatists, if they purpose by their doctrines to overthrow the Great Vehicle, will not be able to do it Hiuen-Tsiang, all though he were a man of slender ability and ordinary wisdom, would nevertheless be quite sufficient (to overcome them). Be not therefore anxious, venerable sirs! If he were to suffer defeat, he knows that the priests of China from this time would have no reputation!"

On this they were all filled with joy

But Śîlâditya râja again sent a letter to this effect. "There is no immediate pressure for my former request: let them wait, and afterwards come here"

About this time there was a heretic of the "Shun-si" sect (the Lôkâtiyas), who came to dispute (with the Nâlanda monks), and he wrote out forty theses and hung them up at the Temple gate "If any one within can refute these principles," he said, "I will then give my head as a proof of his victory"

Several days having passed without any response to this challenge, the Master of the Law sent an attendant (pure man) from within his quarters to go and pull down the writing (document), to tear it in pieces, and trample it under foot.

The Brahman in a great rage asked him and said: "Who are you?"

He said "I am the servant of Mahâyânadêva."

The Brahman, who had long heard of the fame of the Master, was abashed, and dare not go in to dispute with him.

The Master of the Law therefore bade him come in and discuss the points. Then in the presence of Śîlabhadra he called on all the priests to be witnesses whilst he disputed with the Brahman He then noticed in succession the various opinions of the different heretical schools, and said. The Bhûtâs, Nirgranthas, the Kâpâlikas, and the Jutikas,[1] are all differently arrayed. The

[1] Or, Chudinkas, ascetics with matted hair. Cf. Eitel, Handbook, sub. Dyudingas.

Sañkhyas and the Vâiśeshikas[1] are mutually opposed. The Bhûtas cover themselves with cinders, and think this to be meritorious. Their skin of a livid white colour looking like a cat in the chimney corner. The Nirgranthas and their followers go without clothing, and so attract notice, making it a meritorious act to pull out their hair by violence, their skin dried up and their feet hard, and in appearance like the decayed wood on the river bank. The sect of the Kâpâlikas, with their chaplets of bones round their heads and necks, inhabiting holes and crevices of the rocks, like Yakshas who haunt the place of tombs. As for the Chingkias (Chudinkas), they wear garments soiled with filth, and eat putrid food. They resemble pigs that lie wallowing in the midst of a cesspool. And now, how can you regard these things as proofs of wisdom?—are they not evidences of madness and folly?

As to the heretics called Sañkhyas (sho-lun), they establish twenty-five principles, from prakriti or mûla-prakriti, proceeds mahat, from mahat proceeds ahankâra, from this proceed the five subtle particles (called tanmâtra), from these proceed the five elements, from these the eleven organs (of sense and action). These twenty-four all minister to and cherish the soul (âtman), which accepting and using the help thus given, excludes and removes itself. This being done, then the "soul" remains pure and uncontaminated.[2]

As for the Vaiśêshikas,[3] they establish six predicaments, viz., "the true" (substance), quality, action, existence, the same and the different nature, the harmonious aggregate nature. These six are apprehended by soul, which by apprehending them, not being already liberated, is, by this apprehension, liberated, and by freedom from the six lakshanas,[4] it arrives at what is called Nirvâna.

[1] Formerly called Wei-shi-sse, the expression used in the Text Shing lun, probably refers to this system, as a logical school of philosophy.

[2] The difficulty of this translation is very great. I depend on the Chinese version of the Sañkhya-Kârikâ (Nanjio, No. 1300).

[3] Colebrooke, p. 182.

[4] Chinese "siang."

But now, to rebut the principles of the Sâṁkhya-Sâstra, you say that in the presence of your twenty-five principles, the character of "soul"[1] is distinct and diverse, but by intermingling with the other twenty-four it becomes substantially and intimately one And you say that Nature (Prakriti) is hypostatised by union with the three "gunas" of "Sattva," "rajas" and "tamas," and by intermingling of these three, there is perfected the "Mahat" and the other twenty-three principles, thus you affirm that these twenty-three principles are perfected by the three gunas But if you constrain your "Mahat" and the others, to lay hold of the three, and so to become perfect, as in case of a crowd or a forest[2] and without this intermingling they are false,—how then do you say that "all things are true" (substantially true)?

Again, "Mâhat" and the rest, being each perfected by the three, then each one so perfected is the same as the whole, but if each is the same as the whole, then the office of each ought to be the same, and then, where is the force of the three forming the substance of all? Again, if one is the same as all, then the mouth and the eye functions, and so on, are the same as the functions of nature

Again, if each function discharges the duties of all, then the mouth and the ear, and so on, ought to smell perfumes and see colours, for if not, what is the meaning of the assertion that the three "gunas" make one common substance? How can any sensible man formulate such principles?

But again, "Prakriti" and "âtman," both being eternal, ought to be in their hypostases identical; how, then, can one, in distinction from the other, by interminghng, produce Mâhat, and so on?

But again, with respect to the nature of "âtman," if it

[1] Personal existence

[2] "We speak of the qualities of Nature as we do of the trees of a forest,' say the Sankhyas.—Colebrooke, p 158 is eternal, then it is the same as "prakriti"—but if they are the same, then what need of speaking of "âtman"?—and then the "âtman" is not able to accept the aid of the twenty-four principles, and so there can be no possibility of establishing the different offices of "subject" and "object."

Thus far, and in the same way, he discoursed, whilst the Brahman was silent and unable to reply[1]

But at last, rising up, he respectfully said: "I am overcome, I am ready to abide by the former compact."

The Master of the Law said: "We who are Śâkyaputras do not propose as our end the destruction of the life of men. I now bid you act as my servant and follow my directions (teaching, or doctrine)

The Brâhman was overjoyed and immediately attached himself to his service All who heard of this affair were filled with admiration and praise

And now, the Master of the Law being desirous to go to Orissa, inquired about getting the essay of the "Little Vehicle" which proposed to destroy the principles of the "Great Vehicle" in 700 ślokas.

The Master of the Law after examination found several passages of a doubtful character

He then addressed the Brâhman whom he had conquered: "Have you in former days studied these principles or not?"

He replied: "Yes! I have studied them five times."

The Master of the Law wished to make him speak to the point—on which he said "How can I, who am your slave, venture to instruct you?"

Then the Master of the Law said: "These are heretical doctrines of which I know nothing you may speak to me without any compunction."

[1] The foregoing section is omitted by Julien. I offer my translation as tentative only.

"In that case," he said, "let us wait till the middle of night, lest any of the public should suppose that you had aught to learn from me, your slave, and so lose confidence in your celebrity."

Accordingly when the night was advanced he dismissed all the rest, and caused him to go through the entire work.

Then having grasped the errors of the work, he wrote a refutation of it in 1600 ślokas, and called it "The destruction of heresy," taking up the doctrines of the Great Vehicle, point by point

He presented the work to Śîlabhadra, and amongst all the disciples there was not one, on reading the work, but was consenting to it. "Who," they said, "can overturn such arguments?"

And now, not forgetful of the origin of this refutation, he said to the Brâhman "You have been sufficiently humiliated as my slave, after conquest had in argument, I now liberate you, you may go where you will"

The Brâhman, filled with joy, went forth to Kâmarûpa, in Eastern India, and told Kumâra-râja about the high qualities of the Master of the Law. The king hearing of it was overjoyed, and immediately sent a message, bidding the Master of the Law to come to him.

BOOK V.

Begins with the prediction of the Nirgrantha relating to his return home, and ends with his arrival in China

IN the interval, before the arrival of the messenger of Kumâra, a naked Nirgrantha disciple, whose name was Vajra, unexpectedly entered the chamber (of the Master of the Law).

Now the Master of the Law had heard of old time that the Nirgranthas are skilled in divination (divining by lots) He asked this man therefore to be seated and opened out his doubts to him, questioning and saying: "Hiuen-Tsiang, a priest of China, has been here inquiring and studying for a year and some months He now wishes to return home, but does not know whether his way is open to do so, nor whether it is better for his good fortune to stay or to go, he is in doubt, too, about the length or shortness of his life. I pray you, good sir, cast my horoscope and see" [1]

The Nirgrantha then took a piece of white stone and drew a figure on the ground, and after casting the lots, he replied "It is very good for the Master to stay, all the clergy and laity in the five Indies have a profound respect for him, the time for going and successfully returning, with the respect of all, is also fortunate; but not so good as the other As for the years of your life, you will have ten years added to your present age But as for evidence as to the continuation of your present good fortune, there is nothing to be found out"

The Master of the Law again asked him "My mind's

[1] This, in connection with other passages, is sufficient to show the superstitious character of the Pilgrim purpose is to return, but having a great number of images and sacred books, I hardly know if I shall succeed in arriving with them"

The Nirgrantha said: "Do not be anxious Śîlâditya râja, and Kumâra-râja will themselves despatch men as escort, the Master will successfully return without accident"

The Master of the Law, in reply, said: "As to these two kings I have never yet seem them, how then can such a kindness befall me?"

The Nirgrantha said "Kumâra-râja has already sent messengers to invite you to go to him, in two or three days they should arrive After you have seen Kumâra you will also see Śîlâditya"

Having thus spoken he went away

The Master of the Law forthwith making up his mind to return, paid especial attention to his books and images.

All the priests hearing of it, came to him in a body and begged him to remain, saying "India is the place of Buddha's birth The great Saint, although he has passed away, has yet left behind him many traces (of his presence), what greater happiness in life than to visit, and adore, and exalt these (relics)? Why then do you leave these, after having come so far? Moreover, China is a country of Mleċċhas, men of no importance, and shallow as to religion, and so the Buddhas are never born there. The mind (of the people) is narrow, and their coarseness is profound, and hence neither saints nor sages go there from this country, the coldness of the climate, and the ruggedness of the country—these circumstances, also, are enough to cause you to think!"

The Master of the Law replied "The king of the Law, i e Buddha (Dharmarâja), in establishing the principles of his doctrine, designed them for universal diffusion how then can those who have received the benefit thereof, exclude those not yet enlightened. In that country of China the superior magistrates are clothed with dignity, and the laws are everywhere respected The prince is regarded as sacred, the ministers are faithful, parents are loving, children are obedient, virtue and justice are highly esteemed, age and uprightness preferred in honour Moreover, how deep and mysterious their knowledge! how divine the model of their wisdom! their rules in agreement with heaven. They do not regard the seven heavenly bodies as hidden from their literature,[1] they make instruments, divide the seasons, produce the six sharp-notes of music, and so are able to tame or drive away birds or beasts, subdue the spirits to their will, calm the influences of the yang and yin principles in Nature. From the time the bequeathed doctrine of Buddha penetrated to the East, they have highly venerated the Great Vehicle, in meditation, they are placid as the shining waters, in morals, their renown is like the perfume of opening flowers, in practice, they engage the heart, their earnest vow is to obtain the fullest degree of merit, and by quiet abstraction to prepare for the acquisition of the threefold body, and the highest condition of being

"The great holy one descending spiritually (into the world), himself raised the standard of religious teaching, and proclaimed the excellent doctrine, he was exhibited in his golden features to the eyes of men, and still there is no check to the aim of his long career

"How then can you say that Buddha did not go to this country (of China) because of its insignificance?"

They replied: "The Scriptures say that all regions are blessed with plenty or the opposite, according to their meritorious condition in point of religious excellence. It is better for the Master of the Law to live here with us in Jambudvîpa where Buddha was born than to go to

[1] That is, they are acquainted with the movements of the seven heavenly bodies (viz, the sun, the moon, and five planets)

that country, inasmuch as that is a frontier and an evil country, without any religious merit, and for this reason we urge the Master not to return there."

The Master of the Law replied. "Vimalakîrtti, speaking to a disciple, said: 'Why does the sun travel over Jambudvîpa?' 'To disperse the gloom,' was the answer This, also, is the reason why I purpose to return to my own country."

The priests having perceived that there was no agreement likely, besought him to go (with them) to Śîlabhadra, Master of the Law, and set forth his intention to him Then Śîlabhadra, Master of the Law, addressing him, said. "Why, sir, have you come to this resolution?"

He replied "This country is the place of Buddha's birth it is impossible not to regard it with affection, only Hiuen-Tsiang's intention in coming hither was to inquire after the great law for the benefit of his fellow creatures. Since my arrival here, you, sir, have condescended, on my account, to explain (or, recite) the Yôgâchârya-bhûmi-śâstra, and to investigate doubtful passages. I have visited and adored the sacred vestiges of our religion, and heard the profound exposition of the different schools. My mind has been overjoyed, and my visit here, has, I protest, been of the utmost profit I desire now to go back and translate and explain to others what I have heard, so as to cause others also to be equally grateful to you, with myself, in hearing and understanding these things; and for this reason I am unwilling to delay my return and remain here."

Śîlabhadra joyfully replied "These are thoughts worthy of a Bôdhisattva, my heart anticipates your own wishes! I will give orders for your conveyance hence; and you, my friends, do not cause any trouble by delaying him."

Having said this, he retired to his room After two days the messenger sent by Kumâra-Râja of Eastern India presented a letter to Śîlabhadra, to this effect:

"Your disciple wishes to see the great priest come from China I pray you, respected sir, to send him and so gratify this imperial thought of mine"

Śîlabhadra, on receipt of the letter, announced to the congregation as follows "Kumâra-Râja wants to invite Hiuen-Tsiang (to go to him), but we have already agreed to induce him to go to Śîlâditya-Râja's residence, to discuss with the (doctors of the) Little Vehicle If he goes to that one (Kumâra), perhaps Śîlâditya will be expecting him, and then how will he be able to secure his presence? we ought not to send him" And so he told the messenger saying "The priest of China is anxious to return to his own country and so is unable to comply with the king's request"

The messenger having arrived, the king again despatched another to renew the invitation, in these words. "Although the Master wishes to return home, yet for a little while let him come to your disciple There shall be no difficulty about his departure I pray you comply with my humble request, and do not again decline to come"

Śîlabhadra not having consented to the proposal, the king with great anger sent yet another messenger with a personal despatch for Śîlabhadra, the Master of the Law, to the following effect "Your disciple like a common man has followed the way of worldly pleasure, and has not yet learnt the converting power residing in the law of Buddha And now when I heard the name of the priest belonging to the outside country, my body and soul were overjoyed, expecting the opening of the germ of religion (within me) But you, sir, have again refused to let him come here, as if you desired to cause the world to be for ever plunged in the dark night (of ignorance) Is this the way in which your Eminence hands down and transmits the bequeathed law for the deliverance and salvation of all the world? Having an invincible longing to think kindly of and show respect to (the Master), I have again sent a messenger with a written request if he does not come, your disciple will then let the evil portion of himself prevail In recent times Śasaṅgka-râja was equal still to the destruction of the law and uprooted the Bôdhi tree Do you, my Master, suppose that your disciple has no such power as this? If necessary then I will equip my army and elephants, and like the clouds sweep down on and trample to the very dust that monastery of Nalânda These words (are true) as the sun! Master! it is better for you to examine and see (what you will do)."

Śîlabhadra having received the letter, addressed the Master of the Law thus "With regard to that king, his better mind (or, virtuous mind) is fast bound and weak, within his territories the law of Buddha has not widely extended since the time that he heard your honourable name, he has formed a deep attachment for you, perhaps you are destined to be in this period of your existence his 'good friend'[1] Use your best diligence then and go You have become a disciple in order to benefit the world, this then is perhaps your just opportunity and as when you destroy a tree you have only to cut through the root, and the branches will of themselves wither away, so when you arrive in that country only cause the heart of the king to open (to the truth), and then the people will also be converted But if you refuse and do not go, then perhaps there will be evil deeds done Do not shrink from this slight trouble"

The Master of the Law, leaving his teacher, went with the envoy, and arrived there The king seeing him was greatly rejoiced, and met him with his great officers, and paying him reverence with much ceremony, conducted him within his palace Every day he arranged music and banquets, with religious offerings of flowers and incense, and requested him to follow the ordinary rules of religious fast days

[1] For this expression vide Haug's Essays on the Parsees (Trubner's Edition), p. 209.

Thus passed a month and more, when Śîlâditya-râja, returning from his attack on Kongyôdha, heard that the Master of the Law was residing with Kumâra. Being surprised, he said: "I frequently asked him to come here before this—and he did not come, how is it that he is now living there?" Sending a messenger, therefore, he bade Kumâra-râja to send the priest of China to him at once.

The king replied, "He can take my head, but he cannot take the Master of the Law yet." The messenger returning gave this answer, on which the Śîlâditya-râja was greatly enraged, and calling together his attendants, he said "Kumâra-râja despises me How comes he to use such coarse language in the matter of a single priest?"

Then he sent another messenger who said, in an abrupt manner: "Send the head, that I may have it immediately by my messenger who is to bring it here"

Kumâra, deeply alarmed at the folly of his language—immediately ordered his army of elephants, 20,000 in number, to be equipped, and his ships, 30,000 in number. Then embarking with the Master of the Law they passed up the Ganges together in order to reach the place where Śîlâditya-râja was residing When he arrived at the country of Kie-shu-ho-ki-lo (Kajûrgira), there was a conference held, and Kumâra, being about to depart to explain matters, first ordered some men to construct on the north bank of the Ganges a pavilion-of-travel, and then on a certain day he passed over the river and coming to the pavilion he there placed the Master of the Law, after which he himself with his ministers went to meet Śîlâditya-râja on the north bank of the river

Śîlâditya seeing him coming was overjoyed, and knowing his respect and love for the Master of the Law, he did not repeat his former threatening words, but simply asked him where the priest of China was stopping.

In reply he said: "He is staying in a certain pavilion-of-travel."

The king said: "And why did he not come with you?"

"Replying, he said. "Mahârâja has respect for the virtuous, and loves religion, why not send for the Master to come to confer with the king?"

The king said: "It is well, but for the present you may depart to your residence, and to-morrow I myself will come"

Kumâra returning spoke to the Master of the Law, saying "The king, although he says he will come to-morrow, I suspect he will come to-night; and we must attend him when he comes—but if he arrives, let not the Master be moved (with anxiety)"

The Master of the Law replied "Hiuen-Tsiang will conduct himself according to the directions of the Law of Buddha"

About the first watch of the night the king did in effect arrive There were some men who reported that on the river there were several thousand lighted torches, and that they heard the sound of beating drums.

The king said "This is Śîlâditya-râja approaching"

He immediately ordered them to take torches in hand, whilst he himself, with his ministers, went forth a long way to meet him.

As Śîlâditya-râja marched, he was always accompanied by several hundred persons with golden drums, who beat one stroke for every step taken, they called these the "music-pace-drums" (tsieh-po-ku)

Śîlâditya alone used this method—other kings were not permitted to adopt it.

On his arrival the king bowed down at the feet of the Master of the Law, then scattering flowers before him he regarded him with respect, and uttered his praises in verses innumerable; this done, he addressed the Master thus:

"Your disciple invited the Master in former days to come,—why did you not comply with my request?"

Answering, he said: "Hiuen-Tsiang came from far in search of the law of Buddha, and for the sake of hearing the Yôga-bhûmi-śâstra. When your order arrived I had not finished examining this sâstra, and so did not immediately come to meet the king."

Again the king asked, as follows: "The Master comes from China, your disciple has heard that that country has a king of Ts'in, whose fame is celebrated in songs and airs set for dancing and music, I never yet knew who this king of Ts'in was, or what his distinguished merit was, that led to this distinction"[1]

The Master of the Law said: "In my country when there is a man observable for the quality of protecting the good, capable of averting evil from the people, and able to nourish and cherish with fostering care all living things—then they sound his praise in songs and chants arranged to music, in the first place, for the ancestral temple; and then for the use of the distant village folk. The king of Ts'in is the same, now, as the reigning Emperor of China—but before the highest authority of the Emperor (i. e. She-wong-ti) was established, then he was but invested as prince of Ts'in. This was a period of disorder in heaven and earth; the people had no ruler, the fields and plains were covered with the bodies of men, the streams and valleys were full of their blood; during the night ill-omened stars shed their pestilent light, vapours rose with the day, the three rivers were infested by voracious toll-collectors, and the four seas were afflicted with the poison of monstrous snakes.

"The Prince, as the next of kin to the supreme ruler (ti), obedient to the call of Heaven, filled with noble ardour, rallied his troops, put down the oppressors (male and female, k'ing i) by force, seizing the battle-axe and the lance, he quickly calmed the sea, the villagers were profoundly quiet, and the districts restored to order as before. The sun and moon and stars shone out again, and the world was filled with gratitude for his care. For this reason we sing his praises."

[1] The reference is presumably to the Emperor She-wong-ti, B.C. 221.

The king said: "Such a man is one sent by heaven to be the Lord of the world."

Again addressing the Master of the Law, he said: "Your disciple must now return, to-morrow I will escort the master (to our palace)—I trust he will not suffer from fatigue"

Thus taking leave, he departed.

On the next morning the messenger came, and the Master of the Law with Kumâra went together to Śîlâditya's palace, on arriving near which the king with some twenty attendants came forth to meet them Entering they sat down, when choice viands were set before them, accompanied with music and strewn flowers

The entertainment being over, the king said "I have heard that the Master has composed a Śâstra with a view to restrain wicked doctrine—where is this work?"

The Master of the Law replied, "It is here," and then he caused the king to take it and look at it.

Having examined it the king was much pleased, and addressing his attendants and the rest, he said. "I have heard that when the sun rises in its splendour the light of the glow-worm is eclipsed, and when the sound of heaven's thunder is heard, then the noise of the hammer and chisel is silenced so with regard to the doctrine which the Master defends, all the others have been destroyed, and in discussing the method of right deliverance, the priests have not dared to offer a word."

The king said (moreover), "The chief Sthavira of the priests, Dêvasêna, said of himself—that in the explanation of doctrine he was superior to all his rivals, and in his studies embraced all branches of science But in advancing his strange opinions he ever opposed the 'Great Vehicle' Hearing, however, that the stranger priest had come he forthwith went to Vâiśalî, to pay reverence to the sacred vestiges—from this I gather that all these priests are without ability in discussion"

The king had a sister of great intelligence who was distinguished for knowledge of the Sammatîya-school doctrine, she was sitting behind the king, and as she heard the Master of the Law extolling the doctrine of the Great Vehicle, and exposing the extreme poverty of the Little school of Doctrine, she was filled with joy, and could not cease her praises.

Then the king said "The treatise written by the Master is very good, quite enough to convince both your disciple (i e himself), and all these teachers, and the faithful generally, but I fear there are other sectaries belonging to the Little Vehicle, of other countries, who will still cling to and defend their foolish doctrine I propose therefore to call a grand assembly in the town of Kanyâkubja, and command the Śramans and Brâhmans and heretics of the five Indies to attend, in order to exhibit the refinements of the Great Vehicle, and demolish their abusive mind, to make manifest the exceeding merit of the Master, and overthrow their proud thought of 'self'"

The same day he sent an order throughout the different kingdoms that all the disciples of the various schools should assemble in the town of Kanyâkubja to investigate the treatise of the Master of the Law, of China.

Then the Master of the Law, at the beginning of winter, in company with the king, advanced up the river (Ganges) and in the beginning of the last month[1] of the year arrived at the rendezvous

[1] In the Records, i 218, we are told they were ninety days in their progress towards the rendezvous I should be inclined, therefore, to consider the symbol "La" in the text as equal to Varsha

There were present kings of eighteen[1] countries of the five Indies,[2] three thousand priests thoroughly acquainted with the Great and Little Vehicle, besides about three thousand Brâhmans and Nirgranthas and about a thousand priests of the Nâlanda monastery All these noted persons, alike celebrated for their literary skill, as for their dialectic, attended the assembly with a view to consider and listen to the sounds of the Law, they were accompanied with followers, some on elephants, some in chariots, some in palanquins, some under canopies Each was surrounded by its own peculiar attendants, like the clouds for multitude, which in the winter time spread through many scores of miles, and if we said that they were like the standards[3] of the rebellious tribes of the three "Wu," or like the drops of rain which fall from the clouds, even this would not be an exaggeration.

The King had previously ordered two thatched halls to be constructed at the place of the assembly for receiving the figures (of Buddha) and the body of the disciples

When he arrived they were both finished, they were lofty and spacious, each capable of seating a thousand persons. The travelling palace of the king was some five li to the west of the place of assembly, he had in this palace cast a golden statue, and now, ordering a great elephant to be equipped with a precious daïs on its back, he placed thereon (the statue of) Buddha. Then Śîlâditya râja, under the form of Lord Śakra, with a white chowrie in his hand, went on the right, and Kumâra-râja, under the form of Brâhma-râja, with a precious parasol in his hand, went to the left. They both wore tiaras like the Dêvas, with flower wreaths and jewelled ribbons.

Moreover, they harnessed two other great elephants and laded them with jewels and flowers (or, precious

[1] The Si-yu-ki states that there were twenty kings present, vide Records, i. 218

[2] Julien says: "eighteen kings of Central India," but it is not so in the text flowers) to follow behind the image of Buddha, and each step they took they scattered these flowers abroad.

[3] The passage in the original is defaced.

The Master of the Law and the chief servants of the king were directed severally to mount a great elephant, and to follow the king in order, moreover, there were other 300 great elephants appointed for the princes, great ministers, and chief priests of the different countries, on which they rode in double file on each side of the procession course, chanting laudatory verses as they went. The procession began at early dawn from the travelling palace (of the king) As they drew nigh the gate of the outer court of the place of assembly, each one was directed to dismount whilst they conducted the figure of Buddha within the hall. There they placed it on a precious throne, whilst the king and the Master of the Law, in succession, presented it with offerings

After this the king ordered the princes of the eighteen countries to enter the Hall, then, of the most renowned priests celebrated for learning he selected about one thousand to enter the hall, of celebrated Brahmans and followers of heretical doctrine he selected five hundred to enter the hall, and about two hundred of the great ministers of the different kingdoms. The unbelievers and secular persons (who were not able to be admitted) he ordered to be seated outside the gate of the entrance hall.

The king then sent to those within and without, alike, food to eat. This done, he presented as an offering to Buddha [1] a golden dish, a golden cup, seven golden ewers, one golden staff, three thousand gold pieces, and three thousand vestments of superior cotton-stuff.

The Master of the Law and the other priests each offered according to their different ability.

This being over, the king caused a precious couch to be arranged, and invited the Master of the Law to sit upon it as Lord of the discussion.

The Master then began to extol the teaching of "the [1] Julien translates this passage very differently, Vie, p. 244.

Great Vehicle," and announced a subject for discussion, and he commissioned Ming-hien, a Shaman of the Nâlanda monastery, to exhibit it to the members of the great Community. He also caused a placard to be written and hung outside the door of the place of assembly, exhibiting the same to the whole people, and adding, "if there is any one who can find a single word in the proposition contrary to reason, or is able to entangle (the argument), then at the request of the opponent, I offer my head as a recompense."

Thus until night there was no one who came forward to say a word.

Sîlâditya-râja, very well pleased at the event, adjourned the assembly and returned to his palace, whilst the princes and the priests all returned to their resting-places. So also Kumâra-râja and the Master of the Law retired to their resting-places.

On the morrow they again escorted the image, the king and the others, as before

After five days had passed, the unbelievers of the Little Vehicle, seeing he had overturned their school, filled with spleen, plotted to take his life.

The king hearing of it, issued this proclamation: "The seething of error obscuring the truth, is the experience of ages. (The followers of false doctrine), hiding the true, deceive the people; if the world were without superior sages, how could their falsehood be discovered? The Master of the Law of China, whose spiritual power is so vast, and whose power of explanation is so grand and deep, with a view to rebut the errors of the people, has come to sojourn here, to exhibit the character of the great Law, and to rescue the foolish and the deceived. But the followers of delusion and falsehood, not knowing the way of repentance or the forsaking of error, have conceived a murderous purpose against his person; this intention must inspire every one with resentment. If, then, any one should hurt or touch the Master of the Law, he shall be forthwith beheaded, and whoever speaks against him, his tongue shall be cut out, but all those who desire to profit by his instruction, relying on my goodwill, need not fear this manifesto"

From this time the followers of error withdrew and disappeared, so that when eighteen days had passed there had been no one to enter on the discussion

The evening before the dispersion of the assembly the Master of the Law again extolled the Great Vehicle, and sounded the praises of the religious merit of Buddha, by which a vast number of men were converted from error and entered on the right path forsaking the Little Vehicle, they found refuge in the Great Vehicle.

Śîlâditya-râja, reverencing him more than ever, bestowed on the Master of the Law 10,000 pieces of gold, 30,000 pieces of silver, 100 garments of superior cotton, whilst the princes of the eighteen kingdoms each presented him with rare jewels But all these the Master of the Law declined to accept

The king then ordered his attendant ministers to place a howdah upon a great elephant, with the request that the Master of the Law would mount thereon, whilst he directed the great Ministers of state to accompany him; and as they passed through the throng he directed the proclamation to be made that "he had established the standard of right doctrine, without gainsaying"

This is the custom of the Western kingdoms whenever any one has obtained the victory in discussion

The Master of the Law desired to waive this mark of distinction and not to go in procession, but the king said: "It has ever been the custom, the matter cannot be passed over"—and so, holding the Master of the Law by his kashâya garment, they everywhere proclaimed, "The Master of the Law from the kingdom of China has established the principles of the Great Vehicle and overthrown all opposing doctrines, for eighteen days no one has dared to enter on the discussion. Let this be known everywhere, as it ought to be!"

The whole multitude were filled with joy on account of the Master's success, and all wished to fix for him a name in connection with his principles

The congregation of the Great Vehicle called him Mahâyâna Dêva, that is, the Dêva of the Great Vehicle, whilst the followers of the Little Vehicle called him Môksha Dêva, i e. the Dêva of deliverance Then they burnt incense and scattered flowers, and paid him reverence and departed

From this time (or, circumstance) the report of his eminence (virtue) spread abroad everywhere

To the west of the king's travelling palace there was a Sañghârâma under the patronage of the king In this building there was a tooth of Buddha about an inch and a half long and of a yellowish white colour It ever emits a sparkling light

In old days when the Kiitya[1] race in Kaśmir had destroyed the law of Buddha, and the priests and their disciples were scattered everywhere, there was a Bhikshu who travelled (from there) afar through India His follower, the king of Himatala, of Turkhâra, was enraged that this despicable race should destroy the law of Buddha, disguised himself as a merchant, and with a company of 3000 men of might, he took with him many valuable jewels, under the pretext, as he gave out, of offering them (to the king).

[1] Rubruquis calls the Kirais, Crit, vide also Grindle's Ptolemy (Indian Antiq), p. 400 The Kirais, according to Howorth, were a Turkish race, descended from the Uighurs. Ind. Antiq Nov. 1880, p 276.

The king, who was of a covetous disposition, was overjoyed when he heard the news, and sent some messengers to escort him on the way.

But the king of Himatala, who was of a disposition fierce and haughty, and dignified in his carriage like a god, when he arrived at the throne of the king, took off his bonnet and denounced him The Kritya king seeing him thus, was terrified, and forthwith in rising fell to the ground.

The king of Himatala cut off his head which he had seized, and then addressed the body of his ministers and said "I am the king of Himatala, bearing in mind that you slaves had destroyed the law of Buddha I have come to punish you But as the fault lies with one man, it would be wrong to involve you in it You may therefore rest in peace, I shall, however, banish the chief of those who incited the king to his wicked conduct to a distant land; as to the rest I exact nothing" Having exterminated the odious race, he founded a Sanghârâma, and assembling the priests he gave it to them, and returned.

The Bhikshu before alluded to who had gone to India, hearing that his country was restored to quiet, began to return there, staff in hand On the way he encountered a herd of trumpeting elephants approaching him. The Bhikshu, when he saw them, climbed into a tree to hide himself. The elephants forthwith began to pour water on the tree from their trunks, and then with their tusks they underdug it, and after a while it fell. The elephants then lifted the Bhikshu on the back of one of the herd with their trunks, and went off with him.

They arrived at the middle of a great wood, where there was a sick elephant suffering from a wound and lying on the ground.

The elephant then drew the hand of the Bhikshu to touch the place of his suffering. Looking at the swollen part he saw that a bamboo splinter had pierced it—drawing this out he washed away the blood, and tearing up his robe, he bound up the wound, so that the elephant got gradual ease.

Next morning the herd all went away to seek for fruits, which, when found, they respectfully offered to the Bhikshu. The Bhikshu having eaten thereof, an elephant with a golden casket came to the wounded elephant and offered it to him. This one, having received it, offered it to the Bhikshu The Bhikshu having taken it, all the herd took him out of the wood to the original spot where they found him, and placing him on the ground, paid lowly reverence, and departed

The Bhikshu opening the casket, lo! there was the tooth of Buddha. Taking it back (to his country), he devoted himself to its worship (culture).

In recent times Śîlâditya-râja, hearing that Kaśmir possessed a tooth of Buddha, coming in person to the chief frontier, asked permission to see and worship it. The congregation, from a feeling of sordid avarice, were unwilling to consent to this request, and so took the relic and concealed it But the king fearing the exalted character of Śîlâditya, set about digging here and there till he found the relic, and having found it, presented it to the king Śîlâditya seeing it was overpowered with reverence, and exercising force, carried it off to pay it religious offerings This is the tooth spoken of.

After breaking up the assembly the king handed over to the Saṅghârâma the golden image he had cast, and the garments and money, warning the priests to take care of them.

The Master of the Law, first taking leave of the priests from the Nâlanda convent, having taken his books and images, on the 19th day, the conference being ended, paid his respects to the king with a view to his departure home.

The king said: "Your disciple, succeeding to the royal authority, has been lord of India for thirty years and more· I have constantly regretted the small increase to my religious merit, resulting from a want of previous good deeds. In consequence of this I have accumulated every kind of treasure and precious substance in the kingdom of Prayâga, and between the banks of the two rivers,[1] I have established a great religious convocation every five years, to attend which all the Śramans and Brahmans of the five Indies are invited, and besides these the poor and the orphans and the destitute, on this occasion during seventy-five days the great distribution of alms called the Moksha is attended to, I have completed five of these assemblies and am now about to celebrate the sixth why does not the Master delay his departure till then, and so, by witnessing the spectacle, rejoice with us?"

The Master answered, "Bôdhisattva by meritorious conduct and by wisdom prepared himself (for enlightenment), the wise man having obtained the fruit (of his conduct), does not forget the root (of his happiness), if your Majesty does not grudge his treasure for the good of others, how can Hiuen-Tsiang grudge a short delay (in his departure) I ask leave, therefore, to accompany your Majesty on your journey"

The king hearing this was delighted, and on the twenty-first day he went forward, conducting him to the kingdom of Po-lo-ye-kia (Prayâga), and proceeded to the great-distribution arena This was bounded on the north by the Ganges (King-kia), and on the south by the Jumnâ (Yen-mu-na) These two rivers coming from the north-west and flowing eastward, unite their stream in this kingdom

On the west of the place of junction of the two rivers there is a great plain some fourteen or fifteen li in circuit It is flat and even like a mirror. From days of old the various kings have frequented this spot for the purpose of practising charity and hence the name given to it, the "Arena of Charitable Offerings" There is a tradition which says that it is more advantageous to give one mite in charity in this place than a thousand in any other place and therefore from old times this place has been held in honour.

[1] i e, the Jumnâ and Ganges

The king directed them to portion out on this space a square enclosure for distributing the charitable offerings, enclosed by a bamboo hedge 1000 paces each side, and in the middle to erect many scores of thatched buildings in which to deposit all the treasures (intended for distribution), to wit, gold, silver, fine pearls, red glass, the precious substance called the Ti-tsing-chu (the Indianila pearl), the Ta-tsing-chu (the Mahânila pearl), &c He constructed, moreover, by the side of these, several hundred store-houses (long buildings) in which to place the silk and cotton garments, the gold and silver money, and so on

Outside the enclosing hedge, he caused to be made places for partaking of food In front of the various depositories for treasure, he, moreover, erected some hundred or so long buildings arranged like the market-places of our capital, in which some thousand people might sit down for rest

Some time before these preparations the king had summoned by decree, through the five Indies, the Śramans, heretics, Nirgranthas, the poor, the orphans, and the solitary (bereaved), to come together to the Arena of Charity, to receive the prepared gifts

As the Master of the Law had not yet returned from the assembly at Kanyâkubja, he now hastened to the place of the distribution of charity The kings of eighteen kingdoms, moreover, followed in the suite of the royal monarch with a like purpose Arrived at the spot they found a body of people amounting to 500,000, or so, already arrived.

Śîlâditya-râja pitched his tent on the north bank of the Ganges The king of South India, Tu-lu-po-pa-cha (Dhruvabatta or Dhruvabhata), located himself on the west of the junction of the rivers Kumâra-râja occupied the south side of the river Jumnâ, by the side of a flowering grove All the recipients of bounty occupied the ground to the west of the position of Dhruvabatta râja.

On the morrow morning the military followers of Śîlâditya-râja, and of Kumâra-râja, embarked in ships, and the attendants of Dhruvabatta-râja mounted their elephants, and so, arranged in an imposing order, they proceeded to the place of the appointed assembly. The kings of the eighteen countries joined the cortège according to arrangement

On the first day of the first period, they installed the image of Buddha within one of the thatched buildings on the field of charity. They then distributed precious articles of the first quality, and clothing of the same character, and offered exquisite meats, whilst they scattered flowers to the sound of music. At the close of the day they retired to their tents.

The second day they installed the image of Âditya-deva, and distributed precious things and clothing in charity, to half the amount of the previous day

The third day they installed the image of Iśvara-deva, and distributed gifts as on the day before.

On the fourth day they gave gifts to 10,000 of the religious community, arranged in a hundred ranks Each received 100 pieces of gold, one pearl, one cotton garment, various drinks and meats, flowers and perfumes. After the distribution they retired.

The fifth arrangement was the bestowal of gifts to the Brahmans, which lasted for twenty days

The sixth turn related to the heretics, which lasted ten days.

The next occasion was the bestowal of alms on those who came from distant spots to ask for charity: this lasted for ten days.

The eighth distribution was to the poor and the orphans and destitute, which occupied a month.

By this time the accumulation of five years was exhausted. Except the horses, elephants, and military accoutrements which were necessary for maintaining order and protecting the royal estate, nothing remained. Besides these the king freely gave away his gems and goods, his clothing and necklaces, ear-rings, bracelets, chaplets, neck-jewel and bright head-jewel, all these he freely gave without stint

All being given away, he begged from his sister an ordinary second-hand garment, and having put it on he paid worship to the Buddhas of the ten regions, and as he exulted with joy with his hands closed in adoration, he said: "In amassing all this wealth and treasure I ever feared that it was not safely stored in a strong place, but now having bestowed this treasure in the field of religious merit, I can safely say it is well bestowed Oh that I (Śilâdítya) may in all my future births ever thus religiously give in charity to mankind my stores of wealth, and thus complete in myself the ten independent powers (daśabalas) [of a Buddha]"

The two magnificent convocations being finished the kings severally distributed among the people their money and treasure for the purpose of redeeming the royal necklaces, hair-jewels, court vestments, &c., and then taking them, restored them to the king; and then after a few days these same things were again given away in charity, as before

But now the Master of the Law requested the king to let him return home, as he desired

The king replied: "Your humble disciple, in common with yourself, desires to spread far and wide the knowledge of the bequeathed law of Buddha; why then do you so hastily return home?"

On this he remained yet another ten days.

Kumâra-râja also was courteously affected towards him, and addressed the Master thus: "If the Master is able to dwell in my dominions and receive my religious offerings,

I will undertake to found one hundred monasteries on the Master's behalf"

Hiuen-Tsiang, perceiving that the kings' purpose was not to let him go, afflicted with grief, addressed them as follows "The country of China is very far from this, and has but recently heard of the law of Buddha. Although it has received a general knowledge of the truth, yet it has not accepted it in its entirety On this account therefore have I come to inform myself how to put an end to differences And now having completed my aim, (I remember) how the learned men of my country are longing to fathom to their depth the points I have ascertained. Therefore I dare not delay a moment, remembering the words of the Sûtra —'Whoever hinders men from a knowledge of religion shall, for generation after generation, be born blind,'—if then you hinder my return you will cause countless disciples to lose the benefit resulting from a knowledge of the law, how then will you escape the dread of being deprived of sight?"

The king replied "Your humble disciple admires and values the virtue of the Master, and I would ever look up to and serve him, but to stand in the way of the benefit of so many men would truly cause my heart to be filled with fear I leave the Master to his choice, to go, or to stay, but I know not, if you prefer to go, by what route you propose to return, if you select the Southern Sea route[1] then I will send official attendants to accompany you."

The Master replied "When I left China and arrived at the western limits of the country, I reached a territory called Kau-chang, the king of this place was an enlightened man and passionately attached to the Law When he saw me, in my search after the truth, come to his kingdom, he was filled with profound joy, and freely provided me with every necessary, praying me on my return to visit him once more, my heart is unable to forego this duty, I will therefore return by the Northern road."

[1] That is, by way of Java, or Sumatra.

The king answered, "I pray you, then, let me know what provisions you stand in need of"

The Master replied. "I require nothing."

The king said, "It is impossible to permit you to go thus"

On this the king ordered them to offer him gold coins and other things, Kumâra-râja also bestowed on him every sort of valuable But the Master would take none of them, except from Kumâra-râja he accepted a cape called ho-la-li (Hâri ?), made of coarse skin lined with soft down, which was designed to protect from rain whilst on the road.

Thus he took his departure. The king with a large body of attendants accompanied him for several ten lis, and then returned. On their final separation they could none of them restrain their tears and sad lamentations.

As for his books and images, the Master confided them to the military escort of a king of North India called Udhita, to be carried on horseback, but the advance being slow King Śîlâditya afterwards attached to the escort of Udhita-râja a great elephant, with 3000 gold pieces and 10,000 silver pieces, for defraying the Master's expenses on the road.

Three days after separation the king, in company with Kumâra-râja and Dhruvabaṭṭa-râja, took several hundred light horsemen and again came to accompany him for a time and to take final leave, so kindly disposed were the kings to the Master. Then he commissioned four Ta-kwan (official guides) to accompany the escort: they call such officers Mo-ho-ta-lo (Mahâtâras ?) The king also wrote some letters on fine white cotton stuff and sealed them with red wax (or, composition), which he ordered the Ta-kwan officers to present in all the countries through which they conducted the Master, to the end that the princes of these countries might provide carriages or modes of conveyance to escort the Master even to the borders of China.

From the country of Prayâga he went south-west, through a great desert waste for seven days, when he arrived at the kingdom of Kauśâmbî. To the south of the city is the place where the lord Goshira presented a garden to Buddha

Having adored the sacred traces again, he proceeded with Udhita-râja north-west for one month and some days, passing through various countries. Once more he paid adoration to the sacred traces of the heavenly ladder, and then proceeding north-west three yojanas, he came to the capital of the country of Pi-lo-na-na (Vîrashana) [1] Here he halted two months, during which time he met with two fellow students, Simhaprabha and Simhachandra, who discoursed with him on the Kôsha-sampârigraha-Śâstra, the Vidyâ-mâtra-siddha-śâstra, &c He was met and escorted by all the people with great rejoicings

When the Master of the Law had arrived, he took up his discourse on the Yoga-śâstra-kârika, and the Abhidharma-śâstra. At the end of the two months he took his leave of them, and continued on a north-western route for one month and some days Passing through various countries, he arrived at the kingdom of Che-lan-ta (Jâlandhara), the royal city of North India. Here he halted one month.

Udhita-râja now sent with him an escort, with which, proceeding to the west for twenty days or so, he came to the country of Simhapura. At this time there were about 100 priests belonging to the North, who were in charge of sacred books, images, &c., these, relying on the escort accompanying the Master of the Law, returned in his company And so they went on for about twenty days through mountain defiles These spots being much frequented by robbers, the Master of the Law feared they might be spoiled in an encounter with them, and so made a rule to send on a brother in front, who if he met any robbers, was told to say, "We have come from a long distance searching for the Law, and now we are carrying with us nothing but the sacred books of our religion, and images and holy relics We pray you, therefore, to be our patrons (dânapatis), and protect us without exhibiting a hostile mind" The Master of the Law with his companions and followers brought up the rear. By these means they escaped any harm from the brigands whom they encountered

[1] Vide Records, vol i. p 201, n. 107

Thus travelling on for about twenty days, they reached the country of Takshaśilâ, where the Master again did reverence to the spot where Chandraprabha-râja gave for a thousand times his head in charity.

To the north-east of this country fifty yojanas, is the kingdom of Kaśmir

The king of this country sent messengers to invite the Master of the Law to come to him, but on account of the heavily laden elephants, he was unable to go

After a delay of seven days, he again set forward in a north-westerly direction, and after three days, reached the great river Sindhu This river is five or six li wide. The books, images, and fellow travellers were embarked on board a boat for the passage across, but the Master of the Law crossed the stream mounted on an elephant.

He had deputed one man to accompany the boat for the purpose of looking after and protecting the books and all the different flower-seeds of India. And now when the boat was in the mid-stream, all at once the winds and the waters commingling, caused the waves to rise, and the boat, violently tossed, was almost swallowed up. The guardian of the books, filled with terror, fell into the water, but was finally rescued by the passengers; but there were lost fifty manuscript copies of Sûtras, and the flower seeds of various sorts. With these exceptions, all else they managed to save.

At this time the king of Kapiśa, who formerly dwelt in the town of U-to-kia-han-ch'a (Utakhânda), hearing that the Master of the Law had come, himself went to the river-side to pay his respects and escort him. Then he said "I have heard that the Master has lost many sacred books in the middle of the river. Did you not bring with you here from India flower-seeds and fruit?"

"I did so," he replied

"That is the sole reason," the king said, "of the storm that damaged the boat It has been so from days of old till now, whoever attempts to cross the river with seeds of flowers is subject to similar misfortunes"

The Master then returned to the city with the king, and took up his abode in a temple-convent for fifty days or so In consequence of losing his copies of the Sûtras, he despatched certain persons to the country of Udyâna, for the purpose of copying out the Tripitaka of the Kâśyapîya school

The king of Kaśmir, hearing that the Master was gradually nearing his kingdom, in spite of the distance, came in person to pay his respects, and, after some days, returned

The Master of the Law, in company with the king of Kapiśa, proceeding for a month in a north-west direction, came to the frontiers of the country of Lan-po (Lamghân).

The king sent his son, the heir to his throne, in advance, to direct the people of the capital and the body of priests to prepare flags and banners, and with them to march from the city to escort (the cavalcade back to the city).

And now the king and the Master of the Law gradually approached—and on their arrival they found several thousands of clerics and lay people with flags and banners, a vast concourse, awaiting them.

The people, on seeing the Master of the Law, were overjoyed, and paid him reverence, after which they went before him and in the rear, surrounding him as they advanced, sounding his praises. Arrived at the capital they lodged in a temple of the Great Vehicle. At this time the king held a great assembly for bestowing charity (Moksha-mahâdâna), during seventy-five days.

Once more, going right south for fifteen days, he halted in the country of Fa-la-na (Varana) for the purpose of adoring the sacred traces.

Again, going north-west, he stopped in the kingdom of O-po-kin (Avakan) Again, advancing to the north-west, he stopped in the country of Tsau-ku-ch'a (Tsaukûta)

Again, going north 500 li, he reached the country of Fo-li-shi, and the country of Sa-tang-na (perhaps a mistake for Fo-lo-shi-sa-tang-ha, i e Vardasthâna). From this, going east, they emerged on the frontiers of Kapiśa Here the king again held a great assembly for distributing gifts during seven days, after which the Master of the Law requested to be allowed to take his leave and advance homewards Going north-east one yojana they came to Ku-lu-sa-pang (Krosapam ?), here he separated from the king and proceeded northward

The king sent with him a great officer, accompanied by a hundred men, as an escort, whilst he crossed the Snowy Mountains, and to convey fuel, provisions, and other requisites for the journey, which the king provided.

After seven days they reached a great mountain top; this mountain is marked by its sharp-pointed peaks and dangerous crags, which mount upwards in different and strange forms Now and then there is a flat surface, and then a high sharp peak, there is no uniformity. It would be impossible to narrate the difficulties and fatigues to which they were exposed in crossing these heights.

From this point they were no longer able to ride on horseback: the Master therefore advanced, supported by his staff

After seven days more they came to a lofty mountain pass at the foot of which there was a village of about 100 houses The people feed flocks of sheep which are as large as asses Here they stopped for the day and set off again at midnight, having induced a villager to precede them on a mountain camel as a guide.

In this land there are numerous snow-drifts and glaciers (crevasses) If travellers do not carefully follow the steps of their guide, there is great danger of falling and perishing

They went on thus from dawn till sunset crossing these frozen peaks At this time the company consisted only of seven priests, twenty followers, one elephant, and ten asses, and four horses

On the morrow they reached the bottom of the pass. Tracing their way through a tortuous road they now directed their march towards a ridge which seemed as if covered with snow, but when they got to it they found nothing but white stones This ridge is very high, so that, although cloud-wrapped, the flying snow does not reach its summit It was towards sundown when they got to the mountain top, but the freezing wind was so icy cold, that not one of the travellers dared pause on the top[1]

This mountain affords no trace of vegetation, but only stones heaped up in confusion, and peaks and slender pinnacles, like a forest of trees devoid of leaves Beyond this spot the mountain is so high, that when the wind suddenly rises the birds on wing cannot pass it in their flight. From the south of the ridge to the north of the ridge, there is a distance of several hundred paces—this passed, then one can find a little ease.

Throughout Jambudvîpa we shall not find among the mountain peaks, a higher one than this

The Master of the Law having descended some li to the north-west, found a small level space where he spread his tent for the night. In the morning he again advanced, and after descending the mountain for five or six days he came to the country called An-ta-lo-fo-po (Antarava, Andarâb); this country is the old territory of Tu-ho-lo (Tukhâra).

There are here three Saṅgharâmas and some scores of priests They belong to the Mahâsaṅghika school. There is one Stûpa built by Aśôka-râja.

The Master stopped here five days, and then going north-west four hundred li or so, still descending the mountain, he reached the country of Kwoh-seh-to (Khost), which again formed a part of the old territory of Tu-ho-lo (Tukhâra).[2]

Proceeding north-west from this place, and still continuing along the mountains for 300 li or so, he reached the kingdom of Hwoh (Kunduz) which lies along the side of the Oxus river (Po-tsu); this is the eastern boundary of Tukhâra The capital is situated on the southern [1] bank of the river.

[1] Cf. Records, II 286.
[2] Or, the old Turanian territory, of Records, I p. 37, n. 121.

The Master, because he saw that the nephew of She-hu-khan, was ruling over Tukhâra, calling himself She-hu (i e chieftain), he repaired to his encampment and remained there one month The She-hu having sent a guard of soldiers to accompany him, he, and the merchants in his train, went to the east two days and arrived at Mung-kin (Munjan). Connected with this territory is the country of O-li-ni (Ahreng), the country of Ho-lo-hu (Roh), the country of Ki-li-sse-mo (Krishma, or, Kishm), the country of Po-li-ho (Parika), all these countries formed a part of the old territory of Tukhâra

Again going east from Mung-Kien, entering the mountains and travelling for 300 li or so—we come to the country of Hi-mo-ta-lo (Himatala), this also was a part of the old Tukhâra territory. The habits of the people are in general like those of the Tuh-kiuch (Turks) There is one difference, however, which is, that the married women wear in their head-dress a wooden horn about three feet high. It has a division in front signifying the father and the mother of the husband. The higher division signifies the father—the lower, the mother —and as either of them dies the division (or branch) corresponding to that one, is removed; when both are dead, then the horn is entirely removed.

From this, again going eastward 200 li or so, they arrived at Po-to-na (for, Po-to-chang-na) [Badakshân], which also was a part of the old Tukhâra territory. Here they remained, on account of the frost and snow, for a month and some days

Again going south-east through the mountains about

[1] Julien has "the eastern bank"

200 li, they arrived at the kingdom of Ki-po-kin (Yamgân).

Still going south-east through a mountainous and precipitous district for 300 li, they arrived at the kingdom of Ku-lang-na (Kurân)

Going north-east from this, across the mountains, for 500 li or so, they came to the country of Ta-mo-si-tie-ti[1] (Tamasthiti) This country is placed between two mountains bordering on the Oxus It produces excellent (shen) horses, small in growth but very strong. The people have no manners, and are of a passionate temperament and unseemly appearance Their eyes are chiefly of a bluish-green tint,[2] different from all other people There are ten Sañghâramas here. The capital of the country[3] is named Hwăn-t'o-to, in which there is a Sañgharâma which a former king of this country built. In this Sañgharâma is a stone figure of Buddha, above which is a gilded copper circlet, ornamented with various gems, it hangs unsupported over the head of Buddha, and when men worship the image and invest it, the canopy also moves with them, and when they stop, it stops No one can explain this spiritual prodigy.[4]

North from this country, across some great mountains, there is the country of Shi-k'i-ni (Shikhnân)[5]

Again crossing from Ta-mo-si-tie-ti we come to the country of Shang-mi (Śâmbhî).

From this country, again going east across mountains 700 li, we reach the valley of Pamir This valley is about 1000 li from east to west, and 100 li or so from north to south. It lies between two ranges of the Snowy Mountains Moreover, this valley lies as it were in the

[1] Called also Hu-mi —Ch Ed

[2] Like the pih stone, the colour of the deep sea

[3] Either my text is defective or that of M Julien was redundant, cf. Julien, p 270

[4] Vide Records, II 295

[5] This passage is wrongly placed in the French translation.

midst of the T'sung-Ling Mountains, so that the wind and snow tempests fly to and fro during the spring and summer incessantly The soil is always frozen, vegetation is scanty and rare, the seeds sown do not fructify, the whole district is desert and without inhabitants.

In the middle of this valley is a great lake, 200 li from east to west, and fifty li from north to south It lies in the centre of Jambudvîpa, at an immense height. Regarding its watery expanse it extends beyond range of sight. The animals that dwell in it are of infinite variety, the noise of their ten thousand cries is like the tumult of a hundred workshops.

We see here, moreover, birds ten feet or so in height; eggs as large as a round water-jar, probably the same as were formerly called the Ku-koh (big shells)[1] of the Tajiks (Tsu-chi)

From the western division of the lake proceeds a river, which, flowing to the west, reaches the eastern frontier of Ta-mo-si-ti where it unites with the Oxus, and flowing westward, enters the sea All the rivers on the right, moreover, unite together in the same way.

From the eastern division of the lake a great river proceeds in the direction of the Kie-sha country (Kash-gar), and on its western frontier unites with the Sitâ river, and flowing to the east enters the sea. All the streams on the left, likewise, unite in the same way.

Beyond the mountains which are to the south of the valley is the country of Po-lu-lo (Bolor) where there is much gold and silver; the gold is the colour of fire This lake, moreover, is one with the Anavatapta lake, in its north and south direction.

Proceeding from the eastern side of this valley, scrambling over crags and precipices, and along roads

[1] That is, the egg-shell, probably of the ostrich.

covered with snow for 500 li, they then reached the kingdom of K'ie-p'an-to[1] The chief town of this country is flanked by a high mountain peak, whilst on the north it is backed by the Śitâ river This river on the east enters the sea. Passing through the salt lake (Lake Lob) it flows underground, and emerging at the Tsih-shi mountain, it is the origin of our (Yellow) river

The king of this country, from whom a long succession of rulers arose, was remarkable for his wisdom; it is said (or, he professed) that he took his origin from Chîna-dêva-gotra (i e the offspring of the God of China) In the old palace of the king there is the Sañghârâma of the old Master Kumârajiva [2] this Master was a man of the Takshaśilâ country He was of great spiritual discernment and brilliant reputation Each day he repeated 32,000 words and also wrote others down He delighted in pursuing his religious studies, he was elegant in composition, and was the author of many scores of Śâstras, which gained a wide-spread renown. He was the first master of the Sâutrântika school.

At this time Aśvaghosha flourished in the East, Deva in the South, Nagârjuna in the West, Kumârajiva [3] in the North; these were called the four suns, able to enlighten all that lives The renown of Kumâralabdha had reached such a height that a former king himself attacked his country (Takshasilâ) that he might honour and cherish him.

South-east of the city 300 li or so, there is a great (rock like a) stone wall with two stone chambers in it, in each of which there is an Arhat sitting in a profound (extinct) state of ecstasy, each of them sits upright and without movement they look extremely emaciated, but without any appearance of bodily decay, although 700 years and more have passed (since they arrived at that condition)

[1] For some remarks on this name, Vide Records, II 298

[2] For Kumâralabdha

[3] Read Kumâralabdha.

The Master of the Law remained in this country for twenty days or so, and then going north-east for five days he fell in with a band of robbers, the merchants, his companions, were panic-stricken and made for the mountains; the elephants being driven about in the pursuit, were engulfed in the water and perished.

The robbers having passed by, they all proceeded slowly to the eastward, over crags and across mountain gorges, descending the heights and patiently enduring the cold. After 800 li they emerged from the T'sung-ling mountains and reached the kingdom of U-sha (Och).

To the westward of the capital about 200 li there is a great mountain covered with crags and precipices; on the top of a very high peak is a Stûpa The old story goes, that many hundred years ago, the thunder having shivered a mountain, in the midst of one of the denuded crags there was seen the body of a Bhikshu of an extraordinary size, who sat there with closed eyes, and his matted hair descending over his shoulders and his face. Some woodcutters having seen the sight, went and told the king, he went in person to witness it and to offer his adorations.

The news being spread abroad the people from far and near flocked together, all intent on offering him their religious devotions and heaping up flowers. After this was done, the king said "What man is this?"

A certain Bhikshu answered and said "This is an Arhat who, having left his family, entered on (a condition of) complete ecstasy. Since this occurred many years have elapsed, and therefore his hair has grown to such a length."

The king replied: "If you know how, cause him to arouse himself."

In reply he said: "In the case of one who has long gone without food, when he awakes from his ecstasy his body would decay, so that first you must anoint him with cream, which being rubbed into his body will lubricate and soften his muscles, then afterwards you must sound the ghantâ (a metal gong) when he is stirred up and awakened he will perhaps rise up (from his seat)"

The king answered "Well spoken!" and according to the directions he anointed him with cream and then sounded the ghantâ

The Arhat, then opening his eyes and looking around him, said: "What sort of men are you, clothed with religious vestments?"

They replied. "We are Bhikshus."

He answered "Where now dwells my master Kâśyapa Tathâgata?"

Again they said "He has passed into Nirvâna"

Hearing this he uttered a cry, and then rejoined: "Has Sâkya-Muni yet accomplished 'the unequalled condition of perfect enlightenment'?" (i.e. become a Buddha).

"Yes," they said, "and having procured benefit to the world, he too has passed into Nirvâna"

Having heard this he lowered his eyelids, and after a time, having with his hand raised his locks, he ascended from his place into the air and by his great spiritual power having caused his body to consume itself with fire, which appeared at his will, his bones fell to the ground as his bequeathed relics

The king and the great congregation collected the bones, and raised over them a Stûpa—and this is the one we are noticing.

Going north from this place 500 li or so, we come to the country of Kie-sha (Kashgar).[1]

Going south-east from this place 500 li or so, and crossing the Śitâ river, they passed over a great mountain range and reached the kingdom of Cha-kiu-kia (Yarkiang ?).

To the south of this country there is a high mountain in which there are a number of niches like chambers; many men of India who have arrived at the fruit (of Bôdhi) by their spiritual power, transport themselves here to rest in peace, and a great many of these who have died here (obtained Nirvâna)

At present there are three Arhats who dwell in a mountain cavern here, and have entered into the ecstasy of complete forgetfulness As their hair and beards gradually grow longer, the priests from time to time go to the spot to cut them.

In this country are many Sûtras of the Great Vehicle; this literature includes many tens of works amounting to 100,000 ślokas [2]

Going east from this 800 li or so, we come to the country of Kustana (Khotan) This district is a great flat covered with sand and stones The soil, however, is fit for the cultivation of cereals and is very productive They manufacture carpets (rugs) from wool, fine haircloth, and silken taffeta, the soil produces much white jade and dark jade. The climate is temperate, and the

[1] The old name was Su-li (Syr ?) and so the city was called The right sound, however, was Shi-li ki-li to-li (Śrihritati ?), the way of writing it—Su-li, so commonly adopted—is wrong—Ch. Ed.

[2] It would seem from this (as I have remarked elsewhere) that the Great Vehicle system found its way into India, from Baktria.

common people understand politeness and right principles, they esteem learning and are fond of music They are upright in their conduct and truthful, and in these respects differ from other Tartar tribes (Hu) Their literature (letters) resembles that of India with some slight differences They greatly esteem the law of Buddha.

There are 100 monasteries here and about 5000 priests They mostly study the Great Vehicle. The king is a polished and learned man, brave and versed in the arts of war He is well affected towards virtuous people He professes to be descended from Pi-sha-man (Vaiśravana)

The great ancestor of the king was the eldest son of Aśôka-râja, who dwelt in Takshasilâ Afterwards, being banished from the kingdom, he[1] went forth to the north of the Snowy Mountains. As he went looking for grass and water for his herds, he came to this place and built his chief residence here

After a while, because he had no son, he went to worship in the Temple of Vaiśravana Deva The forehead of the god bursting open in front there came forth a male child, and the ground, fronting the temple, at the same time produced a wonderfully sweet-scented (substance like milk from the) breast, taking this for the nourishment of the child he grew up to maturity.

At the king's death he mounted the throne and established his rule in righteousness, and brought many countries under his power. The present king is his descendant. As his ancestor had been nourished by a breast of the earth, the name of U-tien (for Kustana) was given to it, meaning an earth-pap[2]

[1] Or, should it not be, they, i e the accusers of the royal prince?

[2] Pausanias also speaks of a fountain near which is a stone, mammis mulieb ribus persimile, p 778 I have often thought that the celebrated Gomati Temple at Khotan was so called from "mother earth" In fact, the entire account both here, and in Fa-hien, of the character of the Khotan people and their civilisation, seems to point to a non-Indian origin.

When the Master of the Law entered the frontiers of this kingdom, he came to the city of Po-kia 1 (Bhagpa ?). In this is a sitting figure of Buddha about seven feet high, on its head is a precious jewel-crown, and its appearance is perfect and complete (for majesty) The old people gave the following account of it

The image originally belonged to Kaśmir, and came to this place by invitation.

There was formerly an Arhat who had a Śrâmanêra (as a disciple) whose body was afflicted with leprosy. When he was near death he desired to have a cake of tsoh-mai (sour meal ?) His master by means of his divine sight saw that such food could be got in Kustana. Accordingly he transported himself there by his power of Irrdhi, and having begged some, returned and gave it to the Śrâmanêra. Having eaten it he was filled with joy and desired to be born in that country. His earnest prayer could not be abortive, and so after his death he was born in the royal family

After he had come to the throne, being sharp-witted and brave, he purposed to make a foray and seize some neighbouring territory Crossing the mountains therefore he attacked the old country of his birth.

The king of Kaśmir accordingly chose his generals and marshalled his troops in order to repel the attack

And now the Arhat said "Do not attempt to use force I myself will go to him"

Forthwith he went to the place where the king of Kustana was, and told him about the loss caused by the covetousness and violence of the head-born (Mûrdhaja) king, and then he showed him the garment he had worn when in his former person he had been a Śrâmanêra

The king seeing it, and arriving at a knowledge of his former condition, was deeply ashamed, and forthwith formed an alliance with the king of Kaśmir, and renounced his purpose of conquest Returning to his country, he was accompanied by (or, he received as a guest) the image which he had formerly worshipped, and which now followed the army When the image arrived at this spot it stood still and would go no farther The king and all his army tried to move it forward by force, but it would not move. Accordingly the king raised above the image a little chapel, and invited the priests and their companions to come and worship it Moreover he placed on the head of Buddha (i.e. the image) his own much-valued and magnificent head-dress This head-dress is still to be seen, and is of priceless value on account of the jewels, all beholders are filled with exultation at the sight

The Master of the Law remained here seven days

The king of Khotan hearing that the Master was entering his territories, went forth in his own person to meet him, and the following day he conducted him on his way

The king, arriving at his capital in advance, left his son to attend (the Master)

After proceeding thus for two days the king further despatched an official guide (ta kwan) to conduct him on his onward way

When forty li from the town he rested for the night

The next day the king, with a number of clerics and laymen, taking with them sounding music, perfumes, and flowers, accompanied him along the road on the left side, on his arrival he invited him to enter the city, and located him in a temple of the Little Vehicle, belonging to the school of the Sarvâstivâdins.

About ten li to the south of the city, there is a large Saṅghârama which was built by a former king of this country in honour of Vâiróchana Arhat.[1]

Formerly, when this country had not yet received the benefit of the teaching of the Law, an Arhat came here from Kaśmir, and sat down in silent meditation in the midst of a forest[1]

[1] For an original and compendious account of the history of Khotan, vide Rockhill, "The Life of the Buddha," cap viii.

Some persons who saw him were frightened at his appearance and clothing.

Having told the king about it, he came in person to examine his appearance.

He then asked him who he was, living thus in the midst of a solitary wilderness

He answered: "I am a disciple of Tathâgata, his law enjoins on me this solitary abode"

The king replied. "When you speak of Tathâgata, whom do you mean?"

He answered and said "Tathâgata is the distinctive title of Buddha. He was in former days the eldest son of Suddhódana-râja, his name being Sarvârthasiddha, moved by tenderness for "all flesh" engulfed in the sea of sorrow, without a teacher and without any refuge, he rejected the seven gems belonging to a Chakravarttin, and the 1000 sons, and the sovereignty over the four continents (quarters, or islands), and in the solitary forest earnestly sought after wisdom (Bôdhi), having obtained the fruit of his six years' discipline, his body yellow as gold, he reached the law which is acquired without a Master. He scattered sweet dew (i e, preached on the deathless condition of Nirvâna) in the garden of deer, and caused the brightness of the Mani-gem to shine on the summit of the Ghridrakûta (i e, declared the highest truth). For eighty years he published his doctrine for the profit and happiness (of all creatures) His connection with (conditioned) life being now broken, he peacefully passed away to the true condition of being, leaving his image and his body of doctrine as a perpetual legacy, and these still survive.

[1] The Tsu-la grove, op cit, p 237 The word in our text, however, may mean "the wilderness."

"And now the king by his meritorious conduct in previous states of life has established himself as a ruler of men; he ought therefore to take charge of and enjoin obedience to, this religious system (wheel of the law), that those who understand its purport may find in it their salvation (refuge) But why are you so dumb, as though you heard me not?"[1]

The king replied: "My sins, accumulated and overflowing, have prevented me from hearing the name of Buddha. But now, thanks to the downpouring virtue of the holy man, what remnant of merit I have, has accrued to my benefit May I be allowed to adore his image and obey the doctrine he has bequeathed to the world?"

The Arhat replied "You must seek the joy of fulfilling your vows First then build a Sañghârama, then the divine image will of itself descend"

On this the king returned, and with his various ministers having selected a suitable site, and having summoned his workmen, he asked the Arhat for a plan of the building to be raised He then proceeded with the work.

When the temple was finished, the king further inquired, "The Sañghârama is completed, but where is the statue of Buddha?"

He replied "Let the king only seek the fullest assurance (insight) and the image will come forthwith"

On this the king and all the great ministers and the gentry and people, lighting their incense and scattering flowers, stood still in profound meditation, in a moment the image of Buddha came down from space with its precious dais, glittering and bright, and of a majestic appearance.

[1] This may also be translated, if you turn a deaf ear to my (or, his) 'What can be said (of your wisdom) words."

The king seeing it, was filled with joy, and congratulated himself on his extreme good fortune Moreover, he requested the Arhat to preach the Law for the benefit of the people Then, because he instituted for the people (or, among the people) a festival of dedication, this Sañghârama is (remembered as) the very first foundation in the country.

The Master of the Law, since he had previously lost his books in crossing the river, when he came here, immediately sent messengers to go to Kuchi and to Su-li (Kashgar), to seek for others, and now, notwithstanding his delay with the king of Khotan, as they had not obtained the books, he sent forward a young man of Kau-chang with a written memorial, desiring him to follow in the train of the merchants, and to present it at court, with the tidings that he who had formerly gone to the country of the Brâhmans to seek for the Law, had now returned so far as Khotan.

The memorial was couched in these words "The words of the Śramana Hiuen-Tsiang Hiuen has heard say of Ma-yung,[1] Ki-chen, and Ching-Huan,[2] that they were teachers of public morals Fuh-sing[3] was illustrious for his eminent talent. Cho-T'so[4] himself (founded) the schools to the south of the Tsih Here we see the character of these learned men But if we admire these ancient masters for thus going afar in search (or, support of) learning, how much more those who search into the secret traces of the profit-bringing religion of the Buddhas, and the marvellous words of the three Pitakas, able to liberate from the snares of the world? How can we dare to undervalue such labours, or not regard them with

[1] Vide Mayers' Manual, No 479
[2] Op. cit, No 59.
[3] Op cit, No. 147.
[4] Op cit., No 97.

ardour? Now I, Hiuen-Tsiang, long since versed in the doctrine of Buddha, bequeathed by him in the Western world, the rules and precepts of which had reached the East in an imperfect form, always pondered on a plan for searching out the true learning, without any thought for personal safety. Accordingly, in the fourth month of the third year of the period Chêng-Kwan (630, A D), braving dangers and obstacles, I secretly found my way to India I traversed over vast plains of shifting sand: I scaled precipitous mountain-crags clad with snow found my way through the scarped passes of the iron gates, passed along by the tumultuous waves of the hot sea Beginning at the sacred city of Chang'an, I reached the new city of Râjagriha

"Thus I accomplished a journey of more than 50,000 li, yet, notwithstanding the thousand differences of customs and manners I have witnessed, the myriads of dangers I have encountered, by the goodness of Heaven I have returned without accident, and now offer my homage with a body unimpaired, and a mind satisfied with the accomplishment of my vows I have beheld the Ghridhrakûta Mountain, worshipped at the Bôdhi tree I have seen traces not seen before; heard sacred words not heard before, witnessed spiritual prodigies, exceeding all the wonders of Nature, have borne testimony to the high qualities of our august Emperor, and won for him the high esteem and praise of the people. In my travels through successive kingdoms I have passed seventeen years, and now, having come from the country of Prayâga, passed through Kapiśa, surmounted the precipices of the T'sung-Ling, traversed the valley of Pamir, I have reached Khotan.

"And now, because the great elephant (which I had) is perished in the waters, I have not yet succeeded in obtaining transport for the numerous books which I have brought back. On that account I have remained here a little while, but not having obtained (even here) the necessary mode of conveyance, I purpose at once to go forward and visit your majesty. With this view I have sent forward a layman belonging to Kau-Chang, whose name is Ma-huan-chi, in the company of certain merchants, respectfully to present this letter, and to announce my purpose"

After this, during a day and a night, he explained to the priests of Khotan the principles of the Yôga, the Abhidharma, the Kosha and the Mahâyâna-samparigraha-Śâstras

The king with the clergy and lay-people all sought to do honour to his teaching, and many thousands embraced the faith daily.

Seven or eight months having elapsed, the messenger returned with a gracious message from the king, to this effect "When I heard that the Master who had gone to far-off countries to search for religious books, had now come back, I was filled with joy without bounds I pray you come quickly, that we may see each other The priests of this kingdom who understand the Fan[1] language and the explanation of the sacred books, I have also commanded to come and pay you greeting I have ordered the bureaux of Khotan[2] and other places to send with you the best guides they can procure, and conveyances as many as you require I have commanded the magistrates of Tun-wang to conduct you through the desert of shifting sands, and I have desired the Shen-Shen (government) to send to meet you at Tso-moh"

[1] The sacred language of India (Julien) But it cannot be confined to the Sanscrit, as Mr Alwis supposes (Lecture n p 50), because Fa hien speaks of the Buddhist books in Ceylon, as written in the Fan language Records, 1 lxxx *

[2] From this, as Rockhill remarks, (op cit p 231, n) we may gather that Khotan at this time was subject to the king of Kau chang

* Unless indeed, as Mr Foulkes seems to suppose, the books which Fa hien procured in Ceylon were written in Sanscrit (vide Indian Antiq, May 1888, p 124, c 1)

The Master of the Law having respectfully received this letter of instructions, forthwith set forward. The king of Khotan provided him with a large store of provisions.

Having gone 300 li or so from the capital, eastward, he reached the town of Pi-mo[1] In this city is a sandal-wood image of Buddha in a standing position It is thirty feet high, and is of a grave and majestic appearance It has great spiritual virtue, insomuch that men who are afflicted with any bodily hurt, if, according to the place so affected, they place some gold leaf on the corresponding part of the image, they are immediately restored. Those who pay their vows to this image and make request for any favour are mostly successful The old tradition goes that when Buddha was formerly alive in the world, Udâyana-râja, of Kauśâmbî, made this image After the Nirvâna of Buddha it came flying of its own accord to the north of this country, and located itself in the city of Ho-lo-lo-kia (Râgha or Urgha ?), after this it again transported itself to this place. The saying is, that according to tradition, when the religion of Śâkya is destroyed, this image will enter the Dragon palace

Leaving the town of Pi-mo and proceeding eastward, we enter the desert of sand and stone Going 200 li we reach the town of Ni-jang.[2] Eastward of this again is the desert of drifting sand, without water or vegetation, burning hot, and subject to the evil of poisonous fiends and imps. There is no road, and travellers in coming and going have only to look for the deserted bones of men and cattle as their guide We have before described the arid and toilsome character of this desert journey.

Again going 100 li or so, we reach the old country of Tukhâra Six hundred li further on we come to the old country of Che-mo-t'o-na,[3] which is the same as the Ni-mo territory.

[1] Pîmâ, vide Records, ii. 322 [2] Records, ii p 324.
[3] Records, ii 325, n. 75.

Again going north-east 1000 li or so we come to the old country of Na-fo-po, which is the same as the territory of Leu-lan.[1]

From this, after various détours, we arrive at the borders of China. Having obtained conveyances the Master then sent back to Khotan the messengers and their horses and camels They returned therefore, having declined to accept the recompense awarded them for their services.

Having reached Sha-chow, he forwarded a memorial (to the Emperor) The Emperor was then residing in his palace at Lo-yang. On receiving the letter he learned that Hiuen-Tsiang was gradually approaching he then commanded Fong-huan-ling, duke of the kingdom of Liang, of the titular rank Tso-po-she, who had been left as governor of the western capital (Si-gan-fu), to despatch proper officers to go forth and conduct (the Master of the Law)

The Master, understanding that the Emperor desired to question him as to his fault in leaving the country without permission, wished to avoid any delay in his arrival, and therefore pressed forward on his march with haste, and arrived by way of the canal.

The magistrates not knowing the routine of polite reception and escort, were unable to make the necessary preparations, but the news spreading fast, the people came together of their own accord in vast numbers to behold and pay their homage to the Master. The streets were so crowded that when he wished to disembark, he could not advance for the crush, and so he passed the night on the canal.

[1] That is, Shen-shen.

CONCLUSION.

HAVING disembarked, Hiuen-Tsiang was escorted to the western capital (Si-gan-fu), where he arrived in the spring of the year 645 A D[1]

On the day following, the members of the various monasteries conducted Hiuen-Tsiang, with flags and banners, to the convent called Hong-fu (extensive happiness) He here deposited the treasures he had brought from India, viz —

1 One hundred and fifty particles of flesh śarîras, of the Tathâgata

2 One golden statue of Buddha (according to the pattern of) the shadow left in the Dragon cave of the Pragbôdhi Mountain in the kingdom of Magadha, also a glittering pedestal 3 ft 3 in. high This figure resembles the image of Buddha as he is turning the wheel of the Law[2] in the deer-park at Bânâras

3. A sandal-wood figure of Buddha with a shining pedestal 3 ft 5 in high, after the model of the sandal-wood figure made according to the likeness drawn by the desire of Udâyana, king of Kauśâmbî, when he was longing for (the return of) Tathâgata.

4 A figure of Buddha with a shining pedestal 2 ft. 9 in high, after the model of the figure of Tathâgata,

[1] The nineteenth year of the period of Chêng-kwan, 646 A.D (Mayers).
[2] That is, preaching

when he descended on the jewelled ladder from the heavenly palace to the country of Kapitha.

5 A silver figure of Buddha with a translucent pedestal, 4 ft high, after the model of Buddha delivering the Saddharma-pundarîka and other Sûtras on the Ghridrakûta Mountain, in Magadha

6 A figure of Buddha with a translucent pedestal, 3 ft 5 in high, after the model of the figure of his shadow, which he left in the country of Nagarahâra, in the place where he subdued the poisonous dragon.

7 A sandal-wood figure of Buddha with a translucent pedestal, 1 ft 3 in high, after the model of a similar figure representing Buddha as he went round the city of Vaiśalî on his work of conversion

He also deposited in this temple the books of the Great Vehicle, which he had brought from the West, including 224 Sûtras,[1] 192 Śâstras,[2] 15 works of the Sthavira[3] school, including Sûtras, Vinaya, and Sâstras, the same number belonging to the Sammatiya school, 22 works of the same character belonging to the Mahîsâsaka school, 67 books of the same character belonging to the Sarvâstîvâdin school, 17 works of the same character belonging to the Kâśyapîya school, 42 works of the same character belonging to the Dharmagupta school, 36 copies of the Hetuvidyâ śâstra, 13 copies of the Śabdavidyâ śâstra, altogether 520 fascicul, comprising 657 distinct volumes, carried upon twenty horses.

After having visited the chief officers of the western capital, the Emperor being at Lo-yang, the Master pro-

[1] Julien has 124

[2] Julien (whose copy appears here to have been defective) has lun-i-yen, where the symbol yen is evidently a misprint for pih, the number being 192 instead of 92

[3] Julien has throughout his translation substituted Sarvâstivâdas for Sthaviras

ceeded to that town, and had an interview with the sovereign. He was received with the greatest attention in the I-lwan [1] palace Being seated, the Emperor asked him why he had gone from home without consulting him He replied that he had sent three requests for permission to leave the country previous to his departure; but having received no answers he was unable to restrain his desire, and accordingly left without the desired permission

After a lengthened conversation, Hiuen-Tsiang having declined to accept a secular life, retired to the monastery of Hong-fu in Si-gan-fu, and there began his work of translation

At the conclusion of the year 647 AD he had completed the translation of the (1) Bodhisattva-pitaka-Sûtra, (2) Buddha-bhûmi-Sûtra, (3) Shatmukhî-dhâranî, and others

By the end of the year 648 he had completed in all fifty-eight books including the Si-yu-ki (undertaken at the Emperor's express command)

In the year 649 the Emperor caused Hiuen-Tsiang to take up his residence in the Sse-'en Temple [2] Here he continued the work of translation until his death

In the year 650 AD the Emperor T'ai-Tsung died and was succeeded by Kao-Tsung

From this time the Master of the Law devoted himself with earnest resolution to the work of translation He rose every morning at dawn of day, and after a slight repast devoted four hours to the explanation of the Sacred Books And being in charge of the Monastery he had regard to the discipline of the resident monks.

[1] The Palace of the Phœnix

[2] This is the Temple of "Great Benevolence," from which the Chinese title of the work we have before us is taken

Upwards of 100 disciples daily attended his lectures; and notwithstanding his manifold occupations, he showed the same energy in his work as he had exhibited from the first He discoursed largely on the various systems of the schools and the distinguished Masters of the West, so that the princes and ministers who came to listen to his discourses, frequently expressed their admiration and respect for his eminent talent.

In the year 652 A.D the Master of the Law caused a pagoda (Feou-to) to be constructed at the southern gate of the Hong-fuh temple, in which he finally deposited his sacred books and images for safety The total height of this structure was 180 ft It was built after the model of the Indian Stûpas, and had five stages—surmounted by a cupola In the highest storey on the southern side, there was a chamber constructed, in which were preserved copies of the two prefaces composed by the former Emperor and the Prince Royal, to the volumes translated by Hiuen-Tsiang.

In the year 654 a deputation from the Mahâbôdhi Temple in Central India visited the Master and conveyed to him the assurances of the high esteem in which he was held Hiuen-Tsiang replied, acknowledging the honour conferred upon him, and requesting that the books he had lost in crossing the Indus might be replaced by others from India

During the years 655 A D and 656 A.D the Master continued the task of translating his books· he suffered from an old malady contracted in crossing the mountains of India, but by the help of the physicians sent to him from the court he partly recovered In the year 658 the Master returned from Lo-yang to the western capital, in the suite of the Emperor, and took up his residence in the newly constructed temple called Si-ming. Here he remained until signs of advancing age caused him some anxiety lest he should be unable to translate the Prajñâ (pâramitâ) works With the view of entering on this task he requested the Emperor's permission to retire to the Yuh-fa (gem flower) palace, and there in quietness to prepare for this translation In 659 he moved into this palace, and in 660 began the new translation The Indian copy of the Mahâ-prajñâ-pâramitâ Sûtra consisted of 200,000 ślôkas, he purposed to produce an abridged translation, but was warned by a dream not to do so The Master had procured three copies of this work in India, and he at once proceeded to collate these with a view to correct the text from which he translated He was now sixty-five years of age, and feeling that his end was near he worked without interruption in order to finish his task before he died

He completed his labours in the 10th month of the year Lung So (661 A.D.) The entire work of the Mahâ-prajñâ-pâramitâ Sûtra consists of 600 chapters, in 102 vols

Having declined to undertake the translation of the Ratna-kûta Sûtra, he composed himself to await his end He had now finished the translation of seventy-four distinct works, in 1335 chapters He had, moreover, made a vast number of pictures, and written out with his own hands copies of various Sûtras. When the recital of all these works was finished, he closed his eyes and lay perfectly still Having now repeated some verses in adoration of Mâitreya,[1] he gradually sank until the day of his death, in the 10th month, 13th day, of the year 664

[1] The earnest desire of Hiuen Tsiang was to behold Mâitreya and dwell with him in the Tusita heaven Mâitreya, of course, is the future Buddha, and represents the character of Love

He was buried in the Western capital, but in the year 669 his remains were removed by order of the Emperor to a space situated to the north of the valley of Fan-chuen, where a tower was constructed to his memory.

THE ITINERARY OF YUAN-CHWANG.

I. CHINA TO INDIA.
II IN INDIA.
III. INDIA TO CHINA.

WITH TWO MAPS.

COMPILED BY

VINCENT A. SMITH, M. R. A. S

Note The pilgrim's routes from China to India and from India to China are plotted on an extract from Mr Stanford's map of Asia on the scale of 110 miles to the inch

In working out the details the following books treating of Central Asia have been used in addition to Mr Watters' volumes and Beal's translations —(1) Chavannes, Documents sur les Turcs Occidentaux (St Petersbourg, 1903) The map inserted has no scale marked, but the author informs me that it is drawn approximately to the scale of 1 in 250,000, or 39 4 English miles to the inch, (2) same author, Voyage de Song-yun dans l'Udyāna et le Gandhāra (École Fr de l'extrême Or, Hanoi, 1902), (3) Sven Hedin, Through Asia (London, 1898, with maps of the Pāmīr and the Tarim basin), (4) Stein, Sand-buried Ruins of Khotan (London, 1903, with a map of portions of Chinese Turkestan), (5) Bretschneider, Mediæval Researches (London, 1888, Trubner's Or Ser., with a map of the middle part of Asia), (6) India Office map of India, including the countries to the north-west, on the scale of 32 miles to the inch.

Mr. W. R. Carles, C. M. G (Consular Service in China, Ret[d]) has kindly supplied me with references and given valuable help in other ways. (V. A. S.)

I. CHINA TO INDIA.

From September, 629 A. D. to September, 630 A. D.

In the month of September 629 A. D.,[1] Yuan-chwang,[2] being then twenty-eight or twenty-nine years of age,[3] quitted Ch'ang-an,[4] at that time the seat of the imperial court, and started on his long pilgrimage.

From the capital he proceeded in a north-westerly direction through the provinces of Shen-si and Kan-suh, passing through the towns of Tsin-chau and Lan-chau, and so arriving at Liang-chau, the great mart and meeting-place for merchants and travellers from the west The pilgrim was occupied for more than a month at Liang-chau, presumably in completing his equipment, and, when ready, advanced, through Kwa chau, to the frontier Crossing the Bulunghir (Hu-lu) river, and traversing the Kwan, or barrier, of Yu-mēn (Yuh-mên), he passed four out of five of a series of frontier watch-towers, separated one from the other by intervals of a hundred li, or about eighteen miles In pursuance of friendly advice, he avoided the

---

[1] "In the third year and the eighth month of the period Chêng Kwan" (Beal, Life, p 11) Beal equates that year with 630 A D, but Mr. Watters and M Chavannes seem to be right in equating it with 629 A D September roughly corresponds with the eighth month as the Chinese year begins with "the nearest new moon to the month of February" (Du Halde, Hist of China, Engl transl, 3 ed., Vol. III, p 97) A later passage in the Life (p 209) asserts that the pilgrim started in the fourth month, but the date of the eighth month is confirmed by the 'address to the reader' (postface) of the Si-yu-ki (Chavannes, Tures Occidentaux, p 193 note), and harmonizes with the details of the narrative of the travels better than the earlier date

[2] The authorities differ widely concerning the proper way of writing the pilgrim's name Mr Watters' spelling is one way of representing the pronunciation current in Peking of the second element in the name, and of the syllables, forming the first portion, which have been substituted for the original Hiuen, because that word formed part of the name of the emperor K'ang-hi The 'scientific spelling' is said to be Hiuen Tsang (Chavannes, Religieux Éminents, p. 2, note 4, addenda, p 202)

[3] "Twenty-six years of age", according to Beal (Life, p 11) But the pilgrim was born at some time in the year 600 A D., according to Watters (p 10), and so must have completed either twenty-eight or twenty-nine years before starting fifth tower, and plunged into the Mo-ho-yen desert,[1] where he barely escaped with his life, having lost his way and been without water for four nights and five days.

[4] "The capital Ch'ang-an, the modern Hsi-an" (Watters, p 11), = Tch'ang-ngan (Chavannes), = Sian, Si-ngan-fu, Seganfoo, etc of maps and books of reference, = Kenjanfu of Marco Polo The city, which is still of importance, was the capital of the empire during the T'sin, Han, and T'ang dynasties It is now the capital of the province of Shen-si, and includes a quarter known by the ancient name of Ch'ang-an· N. lat. 34° 17′, E. long. 108° 58′.

Beyond the desert, he reached I-gu, the capital of a principality subordinate to the kingdom of Kao-ch'ang, the exact position of which apparently has not been determined. Yuan-chwang, who had intended to travel by the northern route past Kagan-Stūpa, the modern Bishbalik or Pei-t'ing, near Gu-chen (Gutchen), to the north of Turfan, was compelled to change his plans in deference to peremptory orders of Ku-wēn-tai (Khio-wen-t'ai, or Ku-ka), the powerful Turkī king of Kao-ch'ang, who insisted on receiving a visit from the pilgrim A journey of six days through the desert from I-gu brought Yuan-chwang to Pih-li (? = P'ih-chan or Pi-ch'ang between Hami and Turfan), a frontier town of the Kao-ch'ang State From Pih-li he advanced to Kiao-ho, the Kao-ch'ang capital, now represented by Yar-khoto, a few miles (20 li) to the west of Turfan [2]

Yuan-chwang was detained at Kiao-ho for a month or more, and was then sent on his way laden with valuable gifts Passing through the towns of Wu-pwan and To-tsin, which do not seem to have been identified (Beal, Life, p. 34), he came to the kingdom of A-k'i-ni (O-ki-ni, Yen-k'i) The pilgrim does not state the name of the capital, but other Chinese authors give it as either Nan ho ch'êng or Yun-ku, the latter being perhaps only another form of Yen-k'i (Watters, p 48). Its site is generally identified with Kara-shahr (Kharashahr), a town situated to the north of Lake Bagrash (Bostang, or Barashahr), but M. Chavannes holds that there is good authority for maintaining that the ancient town, which he calls Yuen-ki-tch'eng, lay to the west of the lake [3] Yuan-chwang stayed only a single night at the capital of A-k'i-ni, and next morning went forwards and crossed 'a great river', now known as the Khaidu (Kaidu, Khaidick, Haidick, or Tan). After surmounting some hills, and traversing a level valley, he arrived in the kingdom of Ku-chih (Kūcha, Koutcha, K'iu-chi (Beal), Kocha, etc).

At the capital of the same name he was detained for about sixty days waiting for the snow-covered passes of the Tian-shan (Thian-

---

[1] The transcription Mo-kia-yen is erroneous (Chavannes, Les Turcs Occidentaux, p. 74, note 3).

[2] Kiao-ho is generally identified with Karakhojo (Huo-chow), lying about 27 miles (40 versts) to the east of Turfan But strong reasons exist for believing that the position of the capital in the time of Yuan-chwang is marked by Yar-khoto (Chavannes, Les Turcs Occ, pp. 7, 8, 101, 305, note 2)

[3] Watters, p. 48, Les Turcs Occ, p. 7. Karashahr is also spelt Karachar by French, or Harashar, by Russian writers. Sven Hedin visited the town, which is now 'the chief commercial emporium in that part of Chinese Turkestan' (Through Asia, Vol. II, p. 859).

shan) mountains, which lay before him, to be open Enormous masses of snow accumulate during the winter on the mountains to the south of Lake Issik-kül.[1]

From the city of Ku-chih, Yuan-chwang proceeded in a direction slightly south of west for a distance estimated as 600 li,[2] across a strip of desert, to the small kingdom of Poh-lu-ka (= Sanskrit bālukā, or 'sandy', also called Kimē, Kimo, Kumē, or Kumo, with the same meaning in Turkī). The intermediate stages are not named by the pilgrim, but he must have passed the towns now called Sairam and Bai The kingdom of Poh-lu-ka undoubtedly is represented by the modern district of Aksu, but the exact position of the capital is uncertain. The town was known by the name of Nan-ch'eng, or 'South City', and also bore the names of Po-hoan (Pu-han) and Wei-jong. Some Chinese writers identify it with Bai, but Mr Watters prefers to locate it at a place called Khara-yurgun (Kharayurghun, Karayalghan), while M. Chavannes argues that it should be identified with Yaka-aryk to the north-east of Aksu town, which latter stands in N lat 41° 12′, E long 79° 30′ [3] Perhaps the problem is not capable of an exact solution

Yuan-chwang probably proceeded as far south as Aksu, for it is recorded that when he quitted the kingdom of Poh-lu-ka, he travelled in a north-westerly direction to the foot of the great mountain range now known as the Ping-shan, or 'Ice-mountains' (old Chinese Ling-shan, Turkī Musur-dabghan, with the same meaning). The transit through the passes occupied seven days, and was so arduous that twelve or fourteen of the company perished, and the number of oxen and horses lost was still greater (Beal, Life, p 41) There seems to be little doubt that the Pass by which Yuan-chwang travelled was the Bedal (Bedel), and not the Muzart [4] After emerging from the mountains, he crossed the Ajak tash or Chen-chu (Tchen-tchou) river, and in due course approached, and, perhaps, actually reached, the shores of Lake Issik-kul, which he designates simply as the 'Clear (tsing) Lake' The Turkish tribes call it Issik-kül, or the 'Warm Sea', because it never freezes, and a Chinese name, Jo-hai, has the same meaning This great sheet of water,

---

[1] Sven Hedin (Through Asia, Vol I, p 86)

[2] i e twelve days march, if M Foucher is right in holding that the expression 'about 50 li', as used by Yuan-chwang is ordinarily an approximate equivalent for a day's march, which was variable in length, but averaged about four French leagues, nearly ten English miles Yuan-chwang liked short marches. (Notes sur la Géographie du Gandhâra, pp 20, 27, n 1) The distance given in the text seems to be excessive about 112 miles long by 38 broad, is also known to the Mongols as the 'Ferruginous Lake' (Temurtu-nor), and is sometimes called the 'Salt Sea'.

[3] Watters p 65, Chavannes, Turcs Occ, pp. 8, 120, and Index s v. Po-hoan and Po lou-kia.

[4] Chavannes, Turcs Occ, p. 9, and Index, s. v Pa-ta-ling and Bédel.

Opinions differ concerning the question whether the pilgrim passed to the south of the lake, or followed the easier circuitous route through Karakol by the eastern and northern shores The balance of evidence seems to be in favour of the former supposition, and the direct route is consequently shown on the map as that taken by Yuan-chwang [1]

A north-westerly course from Lake Issik-kul brought the traveller to the place which he calls 'the city of the Su-she water', that is to say, the modern Tokmak on the Chu (Tchou) river, which the Chinese knew by the name of Su-she This city was the residence of the powerful Khākān, or supreme chief, of the Western Turks, who hospitably received the pilgrim,[2] and appointed officers to conduct him as far as Kapiśa on the Indian frontier (Beal, Life, p 44)

At a distance of some seventy or eighty miles (400 li) to the west of Tokmak, Yuan-chwang entered the pleasant district lying to the north of the Alexander Mountains, which was known by the name of the 'Thousand Springs' (Chinese Ch'ien-chuan, or Ts'ien-tsuan, Turkī Bing ghyul, transliterated in Chinese as Ping yü, Mongol Ming bulak) The modern town of Tardy seems to mark the position of this district [3]

The next important halting-place was the town of Talossu, situated about seventeen miles (5 farsang) to the south of the modern Auliéata on the river Talas (Taras) [4]

The pilgrim's face was now turned in a south-westerly direction, so that he might traverse in succession the basins of the rivers Jaxartes (Syr Daryā), Zarafshān, and Oxus (Amū Daryā), on his way to India The town designated as 'White Water City' (Pai-shui-ch'êng, Peh-shwui, Beal) cannot have been far from the modern Mankent, which lies about fifteen miles to the north-east of Chimkend Passing through a town named Kung-yu and a district named Nu-chih-kan, Yuan-chwang arrived at Tashkend (Che-shih, Che-she, etc), now the capital of Russian Turkestan, situated on a tributary of the Jaxartes in N lat. 43°, E long 69° From Tashkend probably he proceeded direct to Samarkand (Sa-mo-kin) The descriptions of Ferghana (Fei-han) and Ura-tepe (Ura-Tube, Ouratjube etc.

---

[1] Watters (p 69) advocates the direct route, and this view is supported by the observations of Tomaschek (Turcs Occ , Addenda, p 304) But M. Chavannes (op cit, p 9) prefers the other opinion

[2] Tomaschek is positive that Tokmak represents the capital of the Turkish sovereign (Turcs Occ, Addenda, p 304)

[3] Watters, pp. 82—82, Chavannes, Turcs Occ, references under Ts'ien-ts'uen in Index

[4] Turcs Occ., p. 304

of maps; Chinese Su-tu-li-se-na, ? = Sutṛishna), which are interpolated, do not seem to be based upon personal observation (Watters, p 91)

While staying at Samarkand, Yuan-chwang collected and recorded much information concerning neighbouring regions, and then continued his march, in a direction slightly west of south, to Shahr-i-sabz in Kesh (K'a-sha, K'ê-shih, or Kasanna) From this town he proceeded, by four marches, a distance of about 55 English miles, nearly due south to the famous defile of the 'Iron Gates', which marked the boundary between Sogdiana and Tokhāristān (Tu-ho-lo, Bactria), and is situated about eight miles to the west of Derbent (N. lat 38° 11′, E long 66° 54′)[1] Yuan-chwang thus attained the most westerly point of his pilgrimage, having traversed about forty-two degrees of longitude since he quitted the Chinese capital

On emerging from the pass he turned in a south-easterly direction through Tokhāristān (Tu-ho-lo), and, crossing the Oxus, reached Kunduz (Huo), where he was obliged to halt for more than a month From this resting-place he made an excursion westwards to Balkh (Fo-ho, Po-ho), and thence resumed his journey to India At a distance of about twenty miles (more than 100 li) to the south of Balkh, he passed through a district called Ka-chih (Kie chih), supposed to be that now known as the valley of Gaz, and thence made his way, in a direction east of south, to the 'Great Snowy Mountains', or Hindū Kush range, and so arrived at the pass and city of Bāmiān (Fan-yen-na, Wang-yen) He then turned eastwards through the Ghorband Valley, crossed 'a black range', that is to say, mountains of moderate elevation without snow, apparently those marked on modern maps as the Paghmān Mountains, and so entered the kingdom of Kapiśa (Ka-pi-shih), roughly corresponding with Kāfiristān Yuan-chwang fails to specify the position of the capital, which has not been identified.[2] The pilgrim spent the season of compulsory 'rest' or 'retreat' during the rains at a monastery named Sha-lo-ka in the capital, and, when travelling was again lawful, resumed his journey Passing, evidently, down the valley of the Panjshīr river, and crossing a 'black' range (Siyāh Kōh) he entered the country of Lamghān (Lan-p'o), which, as a foreigner, he considered to be part of India.[3] The traveller had then no difficulty in marching down the valley of the Kābul river until he reached India Proper[4] On

---

[1] Full details are given by Bretschneider (Mediæval Researches Vol I, pp 81—4), and Chavannes (Turcs Occ, p 146, n 5)

[2] For discussions as to the meaning of the term Kapiśa, see Watters, pp 122—4, Chavannes, Turcs Occ, Index, s v, Voyage de Song-yun, p. 37

[3] Watters, p 180

[4] Not through the Khaibar (Khyber) Pass See Holdich, The Indian Borderland, p. 38, Foucher, Notes sur la Géographie ancienne du Gandhâra, Hanoi, 1902.

his way he crossed a 'large river', the Kūnar, and passed through the Na-ka-lo-ho country, or region near Jalālābād, and so entered the kingdom of Gandhāra (Kan-t'o-lo), now the Peshāwar District. His entry into this kingdom may be dated at the end of September or beginning of October, 630 A D

II. IN INDIA.

From October 630 A D to July 644 A D.

Cunningham's approximate 'Chronology of Hwen Thsang's Travels' (Anc Geogr. of India, App A) errs in attempting an unattainable precision of detail But the devious journeyings of the pilgrim in India may be arranged roughly in chronological order, although it is absurd to profess to indicate his exact position in each month of fourteen years If we remember that Yuan-chwang, as a Buddhist monk, was bound to observe the 'rest' or 'retreat' during the rainy season, with a certain amount of latitude as to the exact time of the observance (Watters, I, 145), and if we note the longer halts as recorded, we obtain, as an approximately correct outline of his Indian travels in order of time, the following table —

Rains, 630 A D, at Sha-lo-ka monastery in Kapiśa, ('The Master kept the Rain-rest in this temple' Life, p 56), „ 631 } „ in Kaśmīr (stayed two years, Life, p. 72, say from „ 632 } „ May 631 to April 633),

„ 633 „ at Chīnabhuktī in Eastern Pañjab (stayed fourteen months, Life, p 76),

„ 634 „ at Jālandhara (four months' stay, Life, p 77),

„ 635 „ at Matipura in Bijnōr District (stayed for half the spring and the summer following, Life, p 81),

„ 636 „ at Kanauj (stayed at the Bhadra-vihāra for three months, Life, p 84, and, after leaving, was attacked by the river pirates 'in the autumn'),

„ 637 „ at Nālandā in Bihār (stayed for some time, Life p 113, returned, ibid p 120, and then stayed for fifteen months, ibid p 121 Counting his subsequent visit at the end of 642 A D, his total residence at Nālandā amounted to about two years, Life, p 154), „ 638 „ in Īrina country (Mungīr), where he stayed for a year Life, p 127),

„ 639 „ at either Amarāvatī or Bezvāda on the Kṛishnā, where he resided for several months (Life, p. 137), „ 640 „ at Kāñchī probably, the most southern point attained, where he halted evidently for a considerable time, hoping to visit Ceylon, Life, p. 139);

Rains, 641 A.D, perhaps at the capital of Pulakēśin II (who was dethroned in 642), supposed by Dr Fleet to have been Nāsik at that time, see Life, p 146, „ 642 „ in the Po-fa-to country, probably Jamū in south of modern Kasmīr State, where he stopped for two months, according to Julien. Beal's version 'two years' (Life, p 152 and Watters, II, 256) is difficult of acceptance Yuan-chwang was at Nālandā 'in the beginning of the first month', equivalent to the end of January, 643 (Life, p 156).

„ 643 „ at Pi-lo-shan-na, probably Bilsar in the Itā (Etah) District of the United Provinces, where he halted for two months (Life, p 190) The early months of 643 were spent in attendance on king Harsha Śīlāditya, whom he quitted apparently in April, and he must have reached the Indus (Life, p 191) about the beginning of 644,

„ 644 „ perhaps at Khotan, somewhat later than the normal time Yuan-chwang spent seven or eight months at Khotan (Life, p 210) awaiting his sovereign's permission to return, and, as he reached Ch'ang-an in the spring of 645 (April), he must have arrived at Khotan in September 644 Probably he had crossed the Hindu Kush early in July

This outline cannot be far wrong, and all the pilgrim's various expeditions in different directions must be fitted into the intervals There is no need to follow him now through his complicated wanderings, but a few notes are required to justify the entries in the map

Mr. Watters' inveterate scepticism carried him too far when it induced him to treat as 'doubtful' (I, 223) the identification of Wu-to-ka-han-t'u (or ch'a), the U-to-kia-han-ch'a of Beal, with Ohind (Waihand or Und) on the Indus The proofs of the identity are conclusive (Stein, Rajat transl, Vol II, p 337)

Nothwithstanding Mr Watters' sarcastic criticism that certain discrepancies in distances and bearings are 'not insuperable difficulties to an enthusiastic Indian archaeologist' (I, 249) desirous of identifying the Salt Range region with the pilgrim's kingdom of Simhapura, I am convinced that Cunningham and Stein were right in making the identification Simhapura is described as 'a network of mountain defiles' lying midway, as measured by the number of marches, between Jālandhara and Taxila (Beal, Life, p 191), and this description can apply only to the Salt Range

The country named Wu-la-shih (Wu-la-cha) by Yuan-chwang is undoubtedly roughly equivalent to the Hazāra or Abbottābād District (= Urasā), of which the northern portion lies to the north-west of the capital of Kaśmīr. The observations of Stein (op. cit.

Vol. I, p. 215 n.) are sufficient to show that no adequate reason exists for the doubts hinted at by Mr Watters (I, 257)

Sākala (I, 290), which Mr. Rodgers believed to be represented by either Chiniōt or Shāhkōt in the Jhang District (E. Hist India, p 274 n), is supposed by Dr Fleet and Mr. H. A. Rose to be Siālkōt

The district of Chinabhuktı or Chīnabhuktı, the name of which used to be transcribed erroneously as Chinapatı (I, 292), must have lain near Fīrōzpur The Life is right in placing Tamasāvana (I, 292) at the distance of only 50 li to the south-east of Chinabhuktı town.

Ku-lu-to (I, 298) evidently is identified rightly with Kulu, N N W of Simla, in the basin of the upper waters of the Biās, which must be the 'great river' crossed by the pilgrim when he turned south. Mr Watters admits that the designation, She-lō-t'u-lu, of the country next visited may represent Śatadru The region so named, which was bounded on the west by a 'large river', the Sutlaj or Śatadru, may be taken as comprising the western portion of the Ambāla (Umballa) District, as well as the Sahrind (Sarhind), and Lūdiāna Districts, with the Patiāla State, or part of it.

The bearing S W, that is to say, west of south, to the next place, named Po-li-ye-ta-lo, or Pāryātrā, now represented by Bairāt in Rājputāna, situated N N. E of Jaypur, indicates that the pilgrim visited the eastern part of the Śatadru country, equivalent to the western side of the Ambāla District The distance between Śatadru and Pāryātra is obviously understated as being 'over 800 li', and Cunningham's proposal to read '1800' is reasonable

The distance eastward from Bairāt to Mathurā (Mo-t'u-lo), which is about 95 miles, as measured on the map, agrees well with the pilgrim's estimate of 'above 500 li' In easy country the li may be reckoned as $^3/_{16}$ths of a mile, or somewhere between one fifth and one sixth

The identification of Mo-t'u-lo with Mathurā appears to be certain, and that of Sa-ta-ni-ssŭ-fa-lo with Sthāneśvara (Sthānvīśvara, Bāna) or Thānēsar is equally free from doubt But the distance and bearing given in the text (Life, p 78, Records, I, 183) are erroneous Thānēsar is described as being situated more than 500 li to the N. E. of Mathurā, whereas it really lies N N W of that city, at about double the distance stated A good many errors in figures have crept into certain parts of the MSS. of Yuan-chwang's travels

From Thānēsar Yuan-chwang travelled more than 400 li N. E. to Su-lu-k'in-na or Srughna. The position of this country is fixed unmistakeably by the specification that it was bounded on the north by high mountains, and on the east by the Ganges, while the Jumna flowed through the midst of it. It must have corresponded to the Dehra District, and the north-eastern portion of the Ambāla District, with probably a part of the Sahāranpur District, and some of the Hill States abutting on Dehra.

The distance from the Jumna to the Ganges is greatly overstated in the text (I, 319) as being above 800 li In reality it does not exceed 50 or 60 miles, or 300 li at the outside Mo-ti-pu-lo, or Matipur, is represented by the Bijnōr District, or the eastern part of it, but Mr Watters is right (I, 322) in rejecting Cunningham's identification of the capital with Mandāwar.

Mo-yu-lo, or Mayūra city, clearly was close to Hardwār, although not exactly identical with it, being on the other side of the river (I, 328)

The P'o-lo-hih-mo-pu-lo, or Brahmapura, country is unmistakeably Gaṛhwāl, which lies north of Matipur (I, 330) The modern capital is Śrīnagar, N lat. 30° 14′, E. long 78° 37′.

There is no reason whatever to doubt the identity of Ngo (or O)-hi-ch'i-ta-lo with Ahikshetra, or Ahichatra, the modern Rāmnagar near Aomā in the Barēli (Bareilly) District (I, 332)

Cunningham's later identification (Reports, XI, 15, not cited by Mr Watters) of Bilsar in the Ītā (Etah) District with the capital of Pi-lo-shan-na (I, 332) may be accepted

I do not believe in Cunningham's identification of the little village called Sankisa in the Farrukhābād District with Kapitha or Sankāsya (Sêng-ka-she) (I, 335). Space will not permit of detailed discussion, and I confine myself to the remarks that the position is determined by the fixed points Ahichatra and Kanauj, and that the 'elephant-pillar' at Sankisa cannot be the 'lion-pillar' seen at Kapitha by Yuan-chwang I should look for Kapitha-Sankāśya in the N E. corner of the Ītā District not many miles from Patiālī

Mr. Watters (I, 354), like Cunningham, has been misled by the apparent similarity of the names A-yu-t'ê and Ayōdhya Detailed examination of the question would require many pages, and I can only note that in my opinion the A-yu-t'ê country should be sought in the Fatehpur District. Aphui, 29 miles S E of Fatehpur may be taken as the approximate site of the capital (See Fuhrer, Monumental Antiquities of N. W P and Oudh, p 157) Aphui was one of the stages on the old road from Kanauj to Prayāga (Allahābād), along which the pilgrim was travelling

The A-ye-mu-k'a country (I, 359) seems to correspond to the Partabgarh and Rāi Barēli Districts in Oudh, or parts of those Districts The distance of more than 700 li from A-ye-mu-k'a to Prayāga (I, 361) is an obvious blunder Mr Watters was mistaken, I am convinced, in supposing (I, 360) that Yuan-chwang erroneously applied the name Ganges to some other river Although errors in the statements of distances undoubtedly exist in the pilgrim's text, as we possess it, the bearings and names are generally correct, and must not be tampered with lightly.

The question concerning the position of Yuan-chwang's Kośāmbi is a very difficult one (I, 366), and the materials now available do not justify any positive identification I adhere to the view that the famous Buddhist town was somewhere on an arc distant about 90 miles, more or less, from Allāhābād in a direction between south and west, and am now rather disposed to search for the site at the extremity of the Bāndā District to the N E of Ajaigarh The statements of the Records and Life on the subject are specially detailed and precise, and cannot be ignored

Guesses as to the exact position of P'i-sho-ka (? = Viśoka) (I, 373) and Kāśapura must also be unsatisfactory at present, but, after renewed study of the question, I should not be surprised, if the ancient site Nīmkhār or Nimsār, 20 miles S of Sītāpur, turned out to be P'i-sho-ka If this be so, Kāsapura would be somewhere in the Unāo District The country is full of old sites, and some lucky discovery is needed to give precision to topographical guesses, which alone can never solve the problem [1]

As to the position of Śrāvastī (I, 379) I have no doubt that the ruins lie on the upper course of the Rāptī in Nepalese territory, near the point where the river emerges from the hills The Achiravatī river, which flowed past the city, seems to be the Airāvatī or Rāptī (p 398) Similarly, the river at Kusinagara is called both Ajitavatī and Airāvatī (II, 28), and that river is the Little Rāptī

Mr Watters' descriptions of the mountains, caves, and hill at Śrāvastī (III, 398, 401) offer additional proof that the city lay close to the foot of the Himālaya

Concerning Kapilavastu I still hold the opinion that the remains at Piprāwā were shown to Fa-hsien as those of Kapilavastu, while the guides of Yuan-chwang identified the town with the walled city now known as Tilaura Kōt The reasons for this opinion will be found in my Prefatory Note to Mukherji's Report on the Antiquities in the Tarāi, Nepāl (Archaeol Surv. Rep No XXVI, Part I, Calcutta, 1901)

Mr Watters' remarks on the Lumbini Garden (II, 17, 18) are not quite up to date, and require some correction

The site of Rāmagrāma (II, 20) certainly must be sought near Dharmaulī (Dharmapurī) on the frontier of Nepāl and Gōrakhpur, in approximately N lat 27° 26', and E long 83° 52' (J R A S, 1902, p 151).

The best indication of the site of Kusinagara is that given by General H H Prince Khaḍga Shamshēr Jang, Rāna Bahādur, late Governor of Western Nepāl, who places it at the confluence of the

[1] Major Vost offers fresh conjectures, more or less plausible, in J R A S, 1905, p. 437

Little Rāptī (which he calls Achiravatī) with the Gandak or Hiranyavatī, near Bhavasār Ghāt (Pioneer Mail, 26 Feb, 1904) Mr Watters erroneously supposed (II, 29) that the names Hiranyavatī and Airāvatī (Ajitavatī, Achiravatī) referred to one stream

Ghāzīpur must undoubtedly be the approximate representative of the capital of the Chan-chu country (II, 59)

For discussion of identity of Basāi with Vaisāli see J R. A S, 1902, p 267 (II, 63)

The Vriji (Fu-li-chih) country (II, 81) evidently is roughly equivalent to the northern part of the Darbhanga District and the adjacent Nepalese Tarāi A possible site for the capital is offered by the ruins at Balīgarh or Kshēmāgarh, some 16 miles north of Madhubani, which are miscalled 'Burdras' on the map, and 'Bindras' in the official List of Ancient Monuments in Bengal I am indebted to the Magistrate of Darbhanga for the real name of the place The ramparts are said to be ten feet high and in an excellent state of preservation

The villages Nataka (Na-t'ê) and Kotī (Kou-li) between Vaisāli and Pataliputra (II, 86) perhaps may be identified by local enquiry

Mr. Watters' sceptical remarks (II, 107) fail to shake my belief that the identification of the Ti-lo-shi-ka monastery with the ruins at Tilādha (or whatever may be the proper spelling) is well-established (Cunningham, Reports, VIII, 34, XI, 165)

Mr Watters corrects Julien's transliteration of I-lan-na-po-fato as Hiranyaparvata, and suggests that the first element in the name is the Sanskrit īrana, meaning 'a piece of wild or barren land' This may be substantially right, but the dictionaries give the word as iriṇa or īriṇa Whatever be the accurate form of the name, the locality indicated certainly is Monghyr (Mungīr) (Watters, II, 180)

Kajangala (II, 183) is an improvement on Julien's Kajughira as the transliteration of the Chinese name, which is said to be properly Ka-chu-wen-k'i-lo. The region so designated is the Rājmahāl District

The capital of Karna-suvarna was Rattamaṭṭikā (Rangāmattī, Rungamutty), some twelve miles to the south of Murshidābād (J A S B 1853, and ibid, Part I, Vol LXIII, p 172) The Pundra-vardhana country lay to the north of Karna-suvarna, and Samatata, the delta of the Ganges, lay to the south As Mr Watters points out (II, 190), there is no reason to doubt the identity of the ancient port Tāmraliptī with the modern Tamlūk ,Mr Watters' identification of Srīkshetra with the Tipperah District (II, 189) seems to be correct.

Colonel Waddell and Mr Watters agree in placing, at least provisionally, the ancient capital of Orissa near the village named Nendra, a few miles below Cuttack (Kaṭak), on the Mahānadī (II, 195).

The province which Yuan-chwang calls Kung-yü-t'o is the Gañjām coast, the Kōngōdamandala of inscriptions (Ep Ind., VI, 136)

The capital of Kalinga in Yuan-chwang's time (II, 198) apparently was Kalinganagaram, the modern Mukhalingam in the Gañjām District (see references in E Hist of India, p 356, n)

I accept the identification of T'e-na-ka-che-ka or Dhanakataka with Bezvāda (II, 216) The pilgrim's notes of distances in this part of his travels are largely in excess

I am still of opinion that the Chola (Chu-li-ya) country of Yuan-chwang was substantially the modern Cuddapah District (II, 224, E Hist of India, p 344 and G O, Madras, Public, No 518, dated 18 July, 1905)

The cave-temples seen by the pilgrim in Mahārāshtra undoubtedly were those of Ajantā (Ajīnthā) (II, 240)

—Nobody doubts that the Chinese Po-lu-ka-che-p'o represents Bharōch (Bharōc, Broach, etc), the town near the mouth of the Narmadā or Narbadā river (II, 241), but considerable misunderstanding has arisen concerning the identity of the kingdom of Mo-la-p'o, which Mr Beal and most other commentators have wrongly identified with Malava, or Mālwā, the country of which Ujjain was the capital In my essay entitled 'The Indian kings named Śīlāditya, and the kingdom of Mo-la-p'o' (Z D M G., 1904, p 787) I have shown that Mo-la-p'o was a kingdom of Western India lying between Bharukaccha or Bharōch Kaccha (Cutch), Valabhī, and Ānandapura (Vadnagar) It corresponded roughly with the modern Districts of Khedā (Kaira) and Ahmadābād of the Bombay Presidency, together with parts of the Baroda State and some adjoining territory The identity of Ānandapura (Watters, II, 24) with Vadnagar is demonstrated in the same essay (p 792) on evidence presented by Mr. D. R. Bhandarkar.

It is not possible to locate precisely the country called A-t'a-li or A-ch'a-li (p 243), but there is no reason to doubt that Kaccha (Cutch) is designated by the name K'i-ch'a or Ki-t'a (p. 245)

Mr Watters was needlessly doubtful about the exact position of Valabhī (Fa-la-p'i, p 246), which is quite certainly represented by the ruins at Walā, eighteen miles north-west of Bhāonagar (Arch S.W I, Vol II, p 80, etc) This identification has never been doubted by any archæologist except, apparently, Mr Fergusson.

Ku-che-lo (p 250) with equal certainty is a transcription of Gurjara or Gurjjarā, an important kingdom, the history of which has been investigated recently by Mr. Bhandarkar, Dr. Hoernle, and other writers The capital, P'i-lo-mo-lo, has not been successfully identified. Vivien de Saint-Martin's guess, mentioned by Mr Watters, appears to be erroneous. The country was equivalent to Central and Northern Rājputāna [1]

Wu-shê-yen-na (p. 250) is undoubtedly Ujjain or Ujjayinī, and Chih-chi-t'o (p 251) was understood rightly by Cunningham to represent Jijhoti, or Jejāka-bhukti, the modern Bundēlkhand The suggestion that Chitore (Chitaur) should be considered the equivalent of Chih-chi-t'o is quite out of the question Careful examination of the map and bearings makes it plain that Maheśvarapura (Mo-hi-ssŭ-fa-lo-pu-lo, p. 251) is the modern Gwalior (Gwāliyār)

The precise limits of the pilgrim's kingdom of Sind (Sin-tu, p 252) cannot be determined

Notwithstanding Mr Watters' criticisms (p 254), I am still inclined to believe that Mou-lo-san-pu-lu was intended to be a transcription of Mūlasthānapura, the modern Mūltān, although inaccurately written Po-fa-to (p 255) seems to indicate the region of Jamū (Jummoo), in the south of the Kasmīr State as at present constituted.

A-tien-p'o-chih-lo, whatever the Sanskrit phonetic equivalent may have been, clearly designates the delta of the Indus (p 256).

The countries in the Indus valley, Pi-to-shih-lo and others (II, 258 foll) cannot be identified with precision Their approximate relative positions are indicated on the map Fa-la-na seems to be rightly identified with the valley of the Gūmal (Gumul) river (II, 263)

Everybody is agreed that Ghaznī is either on or near the site of Ho-si-na, the ancient capital of Tsao-ku-t'a, or Arachosia Mr Watters' suggestion (II, 266) that Tsao-ku-t'a is a transcription of jāguḍa, said to mean 'saffron', is novel

Hu-pi-na, the capital of Fu-li-shih-sa-t'ang-na (II, 267) should certainly be identified, I think, with Hupiān or Opiān, near Chārikar, some thirty miles distant from Kābul in a northerly direction.

III. INDIA TO CHINA.

From July, 644 A D to April, 645 A D.

Yuan-chwang, after leaving Ghaznī (Ho-si-na), the capital of the Tsao-kut'a (Tsau-ku-cha or Jāguḍa) country, travelled in a northerly direction for a distance estimated as 500 li, or ten easy stages, and so arrived in the Kābul territory, which he calls Fu-li-shih-sa-t'ang-na The capital was Hu-pi-na (U-pi-na), almost certainly identical with Hupiān or Opiān, situated to the north of Chārikar, in N lat 35° 2′, E long 69° 1′ The city of Kābul, which is 85 miles distant from Ghaznī, is never mentioned by the pilgrim, and perhaps was not important in his time.

[1] 'Gûrjaras', by D R Bhandarkar, in J Bo Br R A S, read 13th Nov. 1902, Hoernle and Stark, History of India, pp. 62, 64.

A short journey eastward brought him to the frontiers of Kapiśa (Kāfiristān), where he was detained for seven days in attendance on the local king He next proceeded a few miles (one yojana) to the north-east, took leave of his host, and turned towards the north, crossing the Hindū Kush mountains by the Khāwak Pass (Po-lo-sena), probably early in July

His next important halting-place was Andarāb (An-ta-lo-fo (or -po)), whence he advanced through Khost (K'woh-si-to) to Kunduz (Huo or Hwoh), which he had visited fourteen years before There he halted for a month (August), and then, instead of taking the northern or Samarkand road by which he had come, he plunged into the mountains, travelling in a direction easterly on the whole. In Badakshān (Po-to-ch'ang-na) he was detained for a month and seven days waiting for the opening of the passes Proceeding along difficult and devious paths, he traversed Yamgān (Yin-po-kien or In-po-kin), Kurān (Ku-lang-na), Wakhan (Ta-mo-si-tie-ti, Huo-mi, or Hu-mi), the capital of which was Kandut (Hun-t'ê-to or Hu-en-t'o-to), and so reached Lake Victoria or Sarikul [1]

Yuan-chwang then made his way to the Wakhjīr Pass, on the watershed of the Oxus and Yarkand rivers, and proceeded through the Tāghdumbāsh Pāmīrs to Tāshkurghan, the capital of Sarikul (Ka-p'an-t'o, or Kie-p'an-to) Passing along the western flank of the huge mountain named Mustagh-Ata, and traversing a region named Osh (Wu-sa, or U-sha) he ultimately emerged in the plain of Kashgar (Kashghar, Ka-sha, or Kie-sha) [2]

From Kashgar the traveller followed the now well-known road through Yarkand to Khotan (Khoten) The capital, Che-ku-ka (Cho-kiu-kia), of the intervening country, should be identified, according to M Chavannes, with Karghalik to the south of Yarkand Yuan-chwang thus reached Khotan, probably in September, and was constrained to remain there for seven or eight months waiting for the imperial permission to return to China In due course the necessary orders were received, and the pilgrim resumed his journey Passing the town of Pi-mo (= Bhīmā), probably the modern Uzun-tati, about 55 miles E N. E from Khotan, he arrived at Niya (Ni-yang, or Ni-jang) on the eastern frontier of the Khotan kingdom [4] He then entered the desert, and so came to the small Tukhāra (Tu-ho-lo) country, which may be located at Andere or Endere [5] He next

[1] See Beal, Life, pp 193—8, Records, II, 285 seqq, Chavannes, Song-yun p 23 n

[2] Stein, Sand-buried Ruins of Khotan, pp 60, 72

[3] Chavannes, Song-yun, p 20 n (Hanoi, 1903)

[4] Stein, op. cit, pp 434, 440

[5] The horrors of this desert are described by a Chinese author (Deguignes, Hist. de la ville de Khotan, p 64, Paris 1820).

passed through the territory known as Che-mo-t'o-na (Chü-mo or Nie-mo), apparently the modern Cherchen

From this points onwards the Life gives few details of the route, but it is clear that Yuan-chwang passed to the south of Lake Lop-nor (Lob-nor), as he is recorded to have traversed the kingdom of Na-fo-p'o, included in that formerly called Lou-lan, which is known to have extended to the south of the Lake [1]

He must have proceeded next by the road skirting the base of the Altyn Tāgh Range, from which turning northwards, he reached Sha-chau (Sha-chow, Sachu) Presumably he must have journeyed onward to the Yu-mēn barrier, through which he had made his escape when furtively quitting China sixteen years before, and thence must have travelled by the ordinary road through Liang-chau to the western capital Ch'ang-an (Hsian or Si-ngan-fu), where he arrived in the spring' of 645 A D, probably at some time in the month of April.

---

[1] Chavannes, Song-yun, p 13 n See also Watters in China Review, VIII 112

Postscript — My views concerning the kingdom of Mo-la-p'o (ant. p 341, E Hist of India, p 279) have been criticized recently by Dr Burgess (Ind Ant, Aug 1905, Vol XXXIV, p 195) and Prof Sylvain Levi (Journal des Savants, Oct 1905, pp. 544—8) The latter scholar holds that the Chinese K'i-ch'a (Kie-tch'a) should be regarded as the phonetic equivalent of Kheta (Kaira of maps), and not of Kaecha (Cutch) The discussion is not yet closed, but I may say that I adhere to the opinion that the kingdom of Mo-la-p'o was quite distinct from that of Ujjain, and that consequently all historical theories are erroneous which rest on the assumption that Śīlāditya of Mo-la-p'o was king of Ujjain.

APPENDICES

(ii) HSUAN-TSĀNG (A D. 600-664) A BIOGRAPHICAL STUDY

(iii) BIBLIOGRAPHY

(iv) INDEX

PREPARED BY

RAJENDRA RAM

M A (HISTORY AND POL. SCIENCE) PH D

U G C SENIOR RESEARCH FELLOW (1970-1972)

PATNA UNIVERSITY

APPENDIX TWO

HSUAN-TSĀNG (A D 600–664) : A BIOGRAPHICAL STUDY

The life of Hsuan-tsāng (A D 600-664) styled "History of the Master of the Law of the three Piṭakas of the "Great Loving-kindness Temple" written by Hui-li and Yen-t'sung in ten chapters in Chinese only half of which (first five chapters) has so far been translated into English is an important source for the study of seventh-century India.

1. Samuel Beal, The Life of Hiuen-Tsiang By the Shaman Hwui-li with an Introduction Containing an Account of the Works of I-Tsing, London, 1884, new ed. 1911, popular ed. 1914, p. XIX.

The story of the writing and publication of the biography of the celebrated Chinese Buddhist pilgrim is interesting Hui-li, one of the pilgrim's disciples wrote the biography dealing with the early career and Indian travels of Hsuan-tsāng in five chapters between A D 648 and the summer of 649 and died in A D 670 or a little later This biography was afterwards enlarged, corrected, rearranged and edited by Yen-t'sung one of the followers of Hui-li, out of the leaves which Hui-li had written and hidden in a cave. Yen-t'sung added an introdution and five supplementary chapters after consulting other texts and authorities and based his account on Hsuan-tsāng's life after his return from India and on his work of translation in China He published all ten chapters in A D 688 The first part of the complete biography written by Hsuan-tsāng's disciple Hui-li in five chapters was translated into English by Samuel Beal[1] and published in 1884 The second part of this biography written by Yen-t'sung in another five chapters has not yet been translated into English so far Hui-li's biography translated by S Beal often explains or elucidates the travels of Hsuan-tsāng

L Cranmer-Byng has added a Preface to the work of

1. Beal, op, cit, pp XIX XX For a thorough study also see S. Beal, (Si Yu Ki, Buddhist Records of the Western World, 1st ed 1884, reprinted, 1969, Delhi, Thomas Watters, On Yuan Chwang's Travels in India (A D 620-645) edited after his death by T W. Rhys Davids and S W. Bushell with two maps and the Itinerary by V A Smith, Delhi, 1961, Arthur Waley, The Real Tripitaka, London, 1952, Arthur F. Wright (Buddhism in Chinese History, Stanford, 1959, p. 133) has warned the readers that most of the available translations are now out of date A readable and accurate biography of Hsuan-tsāng is The Real Tripitakas of Arthur Waley.

Beal on the life of Hsuan-tsāng wherein he has praised the historical biographers and mentions that "Memory looking back viewed them through a golden haze, they were merged at last in ancient sunlight, they were shafts of God rayed in the tangled forests of time In this spirit, then, the man of compassionate feeling, the Śramaṇa Hui-li took up his tablets and wrote the life of Hsuan-tsāng "[1] L Cranmer-Byng further states that Hui-li begins in the true Chinese manner with a grand pedigree of his hero, tracing his descent from the Emperor Hwang-ti, the mythical Heavenly Empror This zeal for following the remotest ancestors over the borders of history into the regions of fable may be largely ascribed to a very human desire to connect the stream of life with its divine source [2]

However, the world of Hui-li was different of what we see today D I Chesnokov writes that in his development, man is shaped by the influence of the given social relations He acquires views, sympathies and antipathies which depend on the environment in which he lives Consequently, before becoming an active element of society, a force which influences its further material and intellectual development man is shaped by society in a definite direction, and is, in a social respect, a product of society, the vehicle and expression of production relations and social relations as a whole [3] Hsuan-tsāng was the product of his socio-economic environment and had the impress of the virtues and vices of his forefathers on his personality. 'His forefathers had been among

1. Ibid, p. V.
2. Ibid.
3. D I. Chesnokov, Historical Materialism, Moscow, 1969, p. 457.

the few privileged members of the Chinese society who had served the ruling Chinese dynasties including the Sui Dynasty (A D 589-618) with bureaucratic eminence and academic fame.[1] The only exception was his self-respecting father who kept himself away of all outward show and splendour.

The reunion of the north and south Chinese regions under the Sui dynasty in A D. 589 and the consolidation of a second unified empire by the T'ang in A D. 618 gave Buddhism a new impetus [2] Despite the rigorous steps taken by the Confucian scholars against priestly orders of the Chinese Buddhists, the Sui sovereigns patronised Buddhism and made it a national religion and above all, published the Tripiṭaka in three new edition [3] The whole epoch from the mid-fourth century to the end of the eighth might well be called the Buddhist age of Chinese history.[4] In fact, it can be called the Buddhist age of Asian history or perhaps of world history, since probably more than half of the world's population were believers in the Indian religion at this time [5] It blanketed the whole of the Asian continent, except for Siberia and the Near East, giving to this vast area degree of cultural unity that has never been matched since then [6] The discovery of block printing in A D 600, establishment of Chih-shih degree in A D 606 and the completion of

1. Thomas Watters, op cit, 5-9.
2. C. P Fitzgerald, China : A Short Cultural History, London, 3rd revised ed, 1961, p. 287.
3. Ibid.
4. E. O. Reischauer and J K. Fairbank (ed.) East Asia : the Great Tradition, Vol. I, London, 1960, p. 147.
5. Ibid.
6. Ibid., pp. 147-148.

extensive canal system in A D 610[1] led to the emergence of a strange complex of religious, industrial and agricultural prosperity in the Chinese society It was under this background that Hsuan-tsâng was born in A D 600[2] at Chin Liu in the province of Honan His father's name was Ch'en Hui who had four sons Hsuan-tsāng was the youngest one

During his childhood Hsuan-tsāng was reared in the Confucian tradition under the personal supervision of his father His father was a man of simple living and high thinking and sought neither honour nor royal favour Anticipating the decay and fall of the Sui dynasty he buried himself in the study of his books He refused several offers of high administrative offices and remained in retirement which made him popular in the eyes of his friends and acquaintances[3] Guided by his contemporary historical forces Ch'en Hui broke the bureaucratic traditions of his elders and devoted his life to the cause of learning, which, in turn inspired his son's future life and work Conquently, Hsuan-tsāng from the beginning of his early education became a man of serious bent of mind and applied himself with diligence to the duties of piety and gentleness at home His biographer Hui-li mentions that a book without elegance and propriety he would not look

1. Wm T. de Bary and others (ed), Sources of Chinese Tradition, Columbia, 960, p 409.
2. Samuel Beal (Si Yu Ki, Bnddhist Records of the Western World, Delhi, 1st ed. 1884, reprinted 1969, p xviii) gives A. D. 603 as the birthdate of Hsuan-tsāng. Thomas Watters (op cit , p 10) and L Cranmer Byng in his preface to Beal's Life of Hiuen Tsiang (op. cit., p vi) believe that the pilgrim was born in A D. 600. Wm. T de Bary (op cit , p. 344) presents the life-period of Hsuan-tsāng as (596-664)
3. S. Beal, The Life of Hiuen Tsiang, p. 2.

at, he would have no intercourse with those whose ways were opposed to the teachings of the holy and wise He did not mix with those of his own age, nor spend his time at the market-gates Although cymbals and drums, accompanied by singing, resounded through the public streets, and girls and boys congregated in crowds to assist in the games, singing and shouting the while, he would not quit his home While he was thirteen years old he came to live with his second brother, Chang-tsi who had already become a Buddhist teacher and was living in Tsing-tu convent at Loyang where Hsuan-tsāng was also selected as a Buddhist monk under royal patronage which facilitated his intellectual zeal in religious learning

It has been mentioned that an outstanding individual is a product not only of historical circumstances but also of the individual conditions influencing the emergence of the kind of man who is needed to carry out certain socially essential tasks, and the degree to which he is able to perform these tasks In relation to world history, to the general laws and the motive forces of the social development, the individual personalities of a historical figure are not, of course, decisive, but they, nevertheless, do leave a definite stamp on the course of historical events, which they either accelerate or slow down [1] Hsuan-tsāng was a personality of this type who carved his way out of his individual personality and erected his image by his performances guided by contemporary historical circumstances After his ordination to Buddhist monkhood Hsuan-tsāng witnessed remarkable changes in society because of the decline of the Sui dynasty Hui-li narrates that the whole

1 G Glezerman and G. Kursanov (ed), Historical Materialism Basic Problems, translated by Devid Fidlon, Moscow, 1908, p. 246

kingdom was in confusion The capital became a randezvous for robbers and the district between the rivers Ho and Lo a resort of wild beasts The magistrates were destroyed and the body of the priests perished in it. The streets were filled with bleached bones, and the burnt ruins of buildings [1] The country was in state of disorder and all the troops were under arms. The books of Confucius and the sacred pages of Buddha were forgotten, every one was occupied with the arts of war There was, therefore, no further religious conferences in the capital All these incidents created a panicky scene in the realm [2] But he was guided by a different socio-historical force inherited from his father Under these circumstances Hsuan-tsāng was not supposed to have shared the sanguinary battles to liberate the society from rioting situations He knew the limitations and degree of his performanes The clashes of his time were not of his social group but of the ruling society, the feudal lords and kings Therefore in search of peaceful conditions Hsuan-tsāng and his brother went first to Ch'-angan, the T'ang capital in northern China, then to Han-chung and finally to Ch' ang-tu in the south-west, a place unaffected by famine and riot

In Ch'eng-tu Hsuan-tsāng stayed with his brother in the Hung-hui temple where he was honoured by the provincial governor with his particular marks of high respect It was at this place that Hsuan-tsāng singled himself out among several Buddhist monk-scholars through his preachings on Abhidharma-śāstra, Nirvāna-sūtra and other Buddhist and non-Buddhist literature.[3] In the yeer A D 622

1. S. Beal, op. cit , pp. 4 5.
2. Ibid.
3. S. Beal, op. cit , p. 7.

at his twentieth year, Hsuan-tsâng was ordained as Bhikshu which enabled him to hold his own ideas in specific philosophical and spiritual issues He started visiting eminent Buddhist monk-scholars in different parts of China In this connection he visited Hang-Chow, Siang-Chow, Chiu-Chow and finally came at Ch'angan [1] Under the guidance of the learned Buddhist scholars in these establishments he studied great religious, philosophical and secular literary works written with indigenous Chinese interpretation and discussed several controversial problems with them He examined their principles and found that each followed implicitly the teaching of his own school, but on verifying their doctrine he saw that the holy books differed much, so that he knew not which to follow [2] Dissatisfied with his knowledge, he wished to elucidate to his own satisfaction debated points of doctrine by inquiry and study in the land where Buddhism had had its birth.[3] L Cranmer-Byng remarks that imperfect translations from the Sanskrit, the limited intelligence of the Chinese priesthood, the sense of vast truths dimly perceived obscurely set forth, the leaven of his first Confucian training—all contributed to the making of a Buddhist pilgrim [4]

Although Buddhism in China reached its acme and joined with other forces in stimulating a new outburst of the Chinese spirit in an expression of the emotions in art and poetry and stirred the Chinese mind to grapple with problems of philosophy,[5] Buddhism, unlike Christianity

1. Ibid., Thomes Watters, op cit, pp 10-11.
2. S. Beal, op. cit, p. 10
3. K. S Latourette, op cit, p. 153.
4. S Beal op cit Preface p vi.
5. K. S. Latourette, op. cit., p. 139.

in the Roman Empire, apparently was taken up by the rich and aristocratic circles before it spread downward to the peasantry and it did not thoroughly permeate the lower classes until the eighth or ninth century, by which time it was losing its influence among the upper classes [1] Buddhist movements which arose in response to the needs of the Chinese society in the Sui and T'ang were built upon the deepened knowledge of Buddhism based on the translations rendered by the earlier Chinese Buddhist monk-scholars.[2] Yet the main vehicle of Buddhism, Sankrit never became a "Church language" as Latin did in the West, Chinese Buddhists with such linguistic knowledge were tiny minority, and most, if not all, of the seminal thinkers and founders of schools of Chinese Buddhism knew only Chinese. Further, there was no Rome or al-Azhar to provide a centre of orthodoxy, a check on the doctrinal innovations of Buddhist thinkers in China [3] Most translations before Hsuan-tsāng's time were made by Indians and Chinese working in collaboration, for there were very few men with a mastery of both languages and a thorough knowledge of philosophy Thus although numerous books had been translated, not many were reliable, based on systematic theories, able to stand up to strict analysis or to be clearly elucidated [4] Naturally the lust for learning Buddhism through its original language could not be satisfied in Chinese environment. Hsuan-tsāng had a burning desire to observe Buddhism through its original language, Indian

1. E O Reischauer and J K Fairbank, op cit., p. 147.
2. Arthur F Wright, op cit., p. 76.
3. Ibid, pp. 76-77.
4. Chin Keh-mu, A short History of Sino-Indian Friendship, 1958, Peking, p. 58.

traditions of monkhood and through visiting Indian Buddhist shrines. He made up his mind to go to India in A. D 629 at his twenty-seventh year.

The pilgrimage of Hsuan-tsāng to the Western regions, in search of the true teachings of Buddhism, is one of the great sagas of Chinese history and literature [1] The period of Hsuan-tsāng's departure in A. D 629, was an eventful one for China [2] T'ai-tsung, the most powerful figure of the brilliant T'ang dynasty, sat on the throne of his father father Kaotsu, the founder of the line [3] The nomad Tartars, so long the terror of former dynasties, succumbed to his military genius, and Kashgaria was made a province of the Empire Already the kingdom of Tibet was tottering to its fall [4] Naturally these favourable conditions facilitated Hsuan-tsāng to embark upon his tedious journey full of geographical and linguistic difficulties which came in his way. In spite of the imperial prohibitions of foreign travel Hsuan-tsāng left China for India, going by the overland route through Tarim basin He passed through Turkistan and Samarkand wherein most of the regions were still Buddhist. Passing through deserts, tough hilly regions and places full of robbers he came to the kingdom which was called O-ki-ni,[5] the territory beyond Persia

I

In the kingdom of O-ki-ni Hsuan-tsāng rested at night near the fountain A-fu with several merchants. But some

1. Wm. T. De Bary and others, op. cit., p 344.
2. S. Beal op. cit, Preface p vi.
3. Ibid.
4. Iibd.
5. S. Beal, Buddhist Records of the Western World—Vol. I, pp. 17-18, a place, Karshar of Kara-shahr near the lake Tenghiz (Bagarach) beyond Persia.

foreign merchants in their company coveting an early sale of their merchandise, privately went forward in the middle of the night Scarcely had they gone ten miles when they met a band of robbers who murdered them. At sunrise Hsuan-tsāng started and crossed the way and found their dead bodies, but all their riches gone. Hsuan-tsāng with his fellow travellers passed on, deeply affected with the sight and shortly afterwards they saw the royal city before them The king of O-ki-ni hosted them for one night Afterwards they started their journey and after going several miles he arrived at the kingdom of Kiu-chi (Kuche or Kucha) The king and his ministers and the celebrated Buddhist monk Mokshagupta with several Buddhist monks and thousands of other men received him A procession led by the images of Buddha came before him. He offered fresh flowers specially brought by the monks for him in order to offer them to the images of Buddha He was welcomed warmly and and he stayed there for one night He came to Moksha-gupta who narrated his travel account of India where he had stayed for twenty years and more for learning Buddhist scriptures Hsuan-tsāng discussed several things of his interest with him On the occasion of the departure of the pilgrim Mokshagupta in a private way addressed his people and said, "This monk of China is not an easy man to discuss with, if goes to India the younger class of disciples will be unwilling to present themselves (i e for discussion or examination')[1] So much was the master feared by him and admired The king gave him servants, camels and horses and attended by monks and laymen belonging to the capital, he accompanied him for a good distance.

1 Hui-li, The Life of Hiuen-Tsiang. p. 40.

Going west from this place two day's journey he encountered two thousand Turkish robbers on horseback dividing among themselves booty they had got from a carvan They proceeded ahead through extremely difficult route full of desert and icy-peaks. After seven days they crossed the mountain-twelve or fourteen of their company were starved and frozen to death, whilst the number of the oxen and horses that perished was still greater. In the way in north-west direction he came to the city Su-yeh[1] where he was received by the Khan of the Turks living in a tent adorned with golden flower ornaments which blinded the eye with their glitter Hsuan-tsang had to speak on this occasion with the help of an interpreter. The Khan gave him warm reception with food and music full of all sounds An interesting point is that Khan exhorted Hsuan-tsāng to stop altogether saying "Sir, you have no need to go to India, that country is very hot, the tenth month there, is as warm as our fifth month as I regard your appearance I am afraid you will succumb under the climate. The man there are naked-black, without any sense of decorum, and not fit to look at."[2] Finally Khan gave him a letter of commendation with a complete set of vestments in red satin and fifty pieces of silk, and then with his officers in person he conducted him a distance of a few miles with letters of commendation for the different countries and to accompany Hsuan-tsāng to the kingdom of kapisā on the Indian frontier.

In the way Hsuan-tsāng reached Sa-mo-kien (the happy country) where he was received by the king. There, two

1. Chin Ken-mu, op. cit., p. 63, At present it is called Kaochang (Karakhoja), now Turfan in the Sinkiang Uighur Autonomovs Region
2. Hui-li, op. cit. p. 44.

barbarians followed his company and while going to worship in a temple these barbarians pursued them. This thing came to the notice of the king who expelled them from the city at the instance of Hsuan-tsāng who, however, saved their lives by requesting the king not to mutilate their bodies. This event influenced the people around him. Several men became Buddhists and were asked to live in the local Vihāras specially established for them Thus Hsuan-tsāng transformed their badly disposed hearts and corrected their evil customs of fire worship and so it was wherever he went.

After travelling about two hundred and fifty miles Hsuan-tsāng arrived at the kingdom of Hwo (Kunduz)[1] where the eldest son of the Khan Yeh-hu (She-hu), Ta-tu-sheh had married the sister of the king of Kau-Chang whose letter of commendation was carried by Hsuan-tsāng There he was detained for more than a month because of incidents of death and other changes related to royal affairs During this time he met Dharmasimha, a Buddhist monk who had travelled India for instruction and discussed many things of his interest He came to know from the Shek (Sheikh-a ruler known by this term among the Turkish race) that there was country of Fo-ho-lo (Baktra), bordering northwards on the Oxus where the men call the capital city the little Rājagṛiha because of its sacred traces Hsuan-Tsāng left the Sheikh and arrived at Balkh where he found about one hundred Sanghārāmas, three thousand Buddhist monks—all-belonging to Hīnayāna Buddhism

At Balkh there was one Prajñākara, a well versed Buddhist monk-scholar of Takka (a region in the

1. S. Beal, op cit, Vol II, p. 287. This country is the old land of the Tuholo or Tub ho lo which means Tukhar—country.

Punjab) because of the importanoe of this place. Hsuan-tsāng remained there for a month and studied the Vibhāṣā-śāstras There he also came to know about two more Buddhist monks, Dharmapriya and Dharmākara who were good scholars of the Tripiṭaka of Hīnayāna Buddhism, but prajñākara was a man of singular wisdom and learning, so that as a youth he was distinguished by his sagacity, thorough study of the Buddhist scriptures and he was perfectly acquainted with Hīnayāna Abhi dharma, Kātyāyana Kośa etc.

From Balkh Hsuan-tsāng went southward in company with Prajñākara upto Bamiana which was a famous centre for its ten religious foundations, several thousand priests belonging to Lokottaravādin school of the Hīnayāna Buddhism. The king of Bamiana invited him to his palace for paying his reverence to the Buddhist shrines with two priests belonging to the mahāsānghika school of Buddhism, Āryadāsa and Āryasena Hsuan-tsāng witnes sed the giant image of one hundred and fifty feet high standing on the declivity of Bamiana hill [1] He also saw an image of Buddha entering Nirvāna about one thousand feet in length in a Sanghārāma From there he went ahead with Prajñākara and after fifteen days they reached Kapiśā, a kingdom about hundred miles in peremeter, having some hundred religious foundations each one eager to detain Hsuan-tsāng.

At Kāpiśā a big stūpa was tottering. The Buddhist monks of this place were anxious to get it repaired. Hsuan-tsāng observed its historical importance and on the request of the Buddhist monks he personally superintended the work of excavation. He got a great copper vessel containing several hundred catties of gold and several scores of pearls at the depth of seven, or eight feet He spent his rainy season rest at this place during which period he and Prajñākara discussed several controversial points He also met three other Buddhist scholars at this place—Manojñghosha Āryavarma of Sarvāstivādin school and Gunabhadra. "Hsuan-tsāng had thoroughly examined the teachings of all schools and answered all questions so that all present there were constrained to acknowledge his superiority" The king of Kapisā, being overjoyed, gave to Hsuan-tsāng, as a distinct present, five pieces of embroidered silk and to others, different offerings At the end of rain retreat Prajñākara returned to Balkh in obedience to the request of the king of Tukhara country

1. At present the Government of Afghanistan has entrusted the task of development of this Bamian area to the UNESCO from the point of view of the tourists coming from several countries of world to see it.

Hsuan-tsāng proceeded eastward, passed through Lamghan, frontier regions, Nagarahāra, Gandhāra region (the capital of Purushapura or Peshawar), Pushkalavati and entered the borders of India from where he went ahead through (Utakhanda or Udabhāndapura), Udyāna (crossing the river Indus), Takshaśilā (Uraśā) In all these places he found Buddhist shrines, scriptures, and learned Buddhist monks and staying two, three, or five days he came down to Kashmir The king of Kashmir gave him royal reception, invited him to his palace and convened a conference to discuss some difficult points of Buddhist doctrine Finally he gave twenty men to copy the Buddhist scriptures for Hsuan-tsāng and ordered five men to wait upon him and obey his orders and to furnish him, free of expense, with whatever things he required. Under the supervision of the chief priest Hsuan-tsāng learned Kośa-Śāstra Nyāya-anusāra-Śāstra and Hetuvidyā-Śāstra daily in a routined manner In Kashmir he came to know about distinguished learning, priests of high religious merit and conspicuous virtue, marked talent and of power of clear exposition of doctrine He also, in turn, with clear sight and unembarrassed language answered all questions unhesitatingly. He stayed there for two years (May 631 to April 633)[1] and then he proceeded in a south-westerly direction He passed through Punāch, Rājapurī, Takka (in the Pujab), crossed Chandrabhāgā river (Jayapura), and went up to Śākala[2] where he encountered a band of fifty robbers in a great forest of Palāśa trees who took off clothes and goods of Hsuan-tsāng and his companions In this connection Hsuan-tsāng liberated a big carvan of men stranded by the robbers with the help of a Brāhmana ploughing his field in the way Finally the villagers arranged the garments and other provisions for Hsuan-tsāng and his companions Although in these regions he did not get materials of his interest, he was warmly received by the common people and was shown tolerant behaviours

Hsuan-tsāng went ahead and arrived at Chīnapati (a region in the eastern Punjab) where he stayed for fourteen months studying Abhidharma Śāstra, Abhidharmaprakarana Śāsana-Śāstra, Nyāyadvāra-tarka-Śāstra and other branches of learning with the renowned priest Vinītaprabha He went further south-east at Tāmasavana Sanghārāma north-east at Nagaradhara Buddhist Vihāra in the kingdom of Jālandhara where he spent four months studying Tripiṭaka and Prakarana pāda-vibhāśā-Śāstra with an eminent Buddhist monk Chandravarmā Having

1. T. Watters, op cit., p. 335 (based on Smith's Calculation).
2. Modern Sialkot.

travelled north-east he reached the kingdom of Kulūta (Kulu valley) north-east to Śatadru (the Sutlaj), going still south-west to Paryātra (now represented by Bairat in Rajasthan) and still to the east he reached Mathurā. At Mathurā he saw stūpas containing the relics of the bodies of Śākya Tathāgata and his disciples, such as Sāriputra, Maudgalyāyana, Upāli, Ānanda, Rāhula and Mañjūsrī He was informed there that in all these places yearly religious festivals with the assembly of the Buddhist monks and their followerstook place

Hsuan-tsāng went north-east to Sthānīśvara and from there to Śrughna in the east He passed through the rivers Yamunā and Ganges and going farther he went to the interior hilly regions leading to Gangottari where he observed the growing influenees of Brāhmanism and the relative decline of Buddhism. He met a renowned priest Jayagupta with whom he studied the Vibhāśā of the Sautrāntika school and he stayed there one winter and half spring season. (about six months). He crossed the Ganges and came to the kingdom (Matipura Rohilkhand near Bijnor district of Uttar Pradesh) of a Śūdra king Hsuan-tsāng stayed there half-spring and following summer season (nearly six months) in A D. 635 studying Tattvasatya śāstra, Abhidharmajñāna prasthāna-śāstra and other Buddhist scriptures with a Buddhist monk-scholar, Mitrasena who was the disciple of Gunaprabha, a famous Buddhist scholar of this area in earlier days He proceeded ahead north to Brahmapura (Garhwal region), then south-east to Ahikshetrā, still south-west to Virasaṇa from where he proceeded north-west and reached Kanauj in A D. 636.

Hsuan-tsāng has furnished a detailed account of Kanauj which was undergoing a period of upserge because of its engagements with some neighbouring countries. However, he has exaggerated Harsha's Buddhist leanings just as Bānabhaṭṭa has emphasised on the king's Śaivite inclinations Prabhākaravardhana was the father of Harshavardhana Śaśānka, the king of Karna-suvarna was zealous of Rājyavardhana's superior military talents which insinuated him to make a plot and murder him. Bhandī, the minister of the Vardhana dynasty assisted Śilāditya Harshavardhna to be the king, a great military genius He avenged the death of his brother He was a benevolent and popular king. After restoring peace he gave up warlike expeditions and stored up the magazines, lances and swords He devoted his time to religious duties. He prohibited the slaughter of living creatures. He himself set an example and exhorted his people to abstain from flesh meat He laid the foundations of several Buddhist Vihāras Hsuan-tsāng was informed that Harsha distributed food to all the priests of his kingdom during three weeks every year Every fifth year he convoked a grand assembly of deliverance, called Mahāmokshaparishad in which he distributed the stores of his treasure in charity. Hsuan-tsāng visited Bhadra-Vihāra where he stayed for three months and under the direction of Vīryasena, an eminent Tripiṭakāchārya he studied the Vibhāśā of Buddhadāsa [1]

II

Hsuan-tsāng going about five hundred miles southeast reached Ayodhyā where he found one hundred temples with several thousand priests belonging to the Hīnayāna and Mahāyāna Buddhism While proceeding towards the kingdom of Hiranyamukha after visiting Ayodhyā and on his way to Prayāga along the Ganges, Hsuan-tsāng fell into the hands of criminals, the devotees of Durgā. They dragged him for sacrifice to their goddess. But prayer, personal peace and timely storm saved the master from an untimely end The robbers bowed before him and left him free. He reached Prayāga where he came to know about the panoramic scene of the Mahāmokshapaparishad in which Harshavardhana distributed during a period of seventy-five days the accumulated wealth of five years among all sorts of Bhikshus, orphans, etc. From this in a south-west direction he reached Kauśāmbī.

1. Here ends the Book II, (commencing with O ki-ni and ending with Kanauj).

At Kauśāmbī, Hsuan-tsāng found ten Sanghārāmas with three thousand Buddhist monks He also saw an old ruined palace in which a large Vihāra about sixty feet high possessed a sandal-wood figure of Buddha made by the king of Udyāna At Kauśāmbī he was shown momentos of, Budda's visit, of Vasubandhu's writing and of Asanga's life Then he went to the kingdom of Viśākhā where he saw twenty Sanghārāmas having three thousand Buddhist priests belonging to Hīnayāna Buddhism From there he went to Śrāvastī where he saw several hundred Sanghārāmas and several thousand priests. Hsuan-tsāng saw many spots flourishing in good condition which had close association with the life of Buddha He proceeded to Kapilavastu which he found in a declining situation with ruins But there he watched everything very minutely and has given meticulous details of the places associated with the life of Buddha [1] He went further to Vārānasī from where he proceeded to Sāranātha. There he saw thirty Sanghārāmas, two thousand Buddhist monks and many remarkable shrines showing the traces of Buddha's activities at that place.

1. Ibid, p. 339, V. A. Smith has furnished reliable details on Kapilavastu Some valuable historical monuments have been excavated by the Archaeology Department of the Government of Nepal during the last ten years.

Leaving Sāranātha Hsuan-tsāng followed the course of the Ganges and arrived at Ghazipur and from there he proceeded to north-east and crossing the Ganges he came to Vaiśālī The town was waste and in ruin and the inhabitants were very few in number Hsuan-tsāng visited some important places at Vaiśālī with an interest He saw a stūpa which was the site of the ruined house of Vimalakīrtti At the side of this he saw the old dwelling of Ratnākara and of the lady Āmradārikā [1] He also saw the place where Buddha turned round to behold Vaiśālī for the last time Then he went to the famous garden which Āmradārikā gave in charity to Buddha In this way Hsuan-tsāng saw Vaiśālī with a sentimental heart attached to the memories of Buddha

Leaving Vaiśalī and following the Ganges river Hsuan tsāng came to the town of Svetapura, where he obtained the Bodhisattva piṭaka-sūtra. From there going to south and crossing the river Ganges he came to the kingdom of Magadha He found fifty Sanghārāmas and ten thousand Buddhist priests belonging to Mahāyāna Buddhism. Hsuan-tsāng came to know the town called Kusumapura (the city of the palace of flowers) This town was later called Pāṭaliputra-pura after the Pāṭali tree (the trumpet-flower-tree). Hsuan-tsāng was informed about the old glories of this town under Bimbisārarāja and and Aśoka. He came to know of the place of torture[2], a stone column about thirty feet high,[3] the

1. Āmarapāli or Ambapāli
2. Agamakūpa or Agamakuān.
3. This stone-pillar was most probably destoryed by the Turkish invaders.

famous kukkutārāma in ruins He was informed that Aśoka had built this convent where he convoked the 1000 priests and offered them with four kinds of religious offerings. Hsuan-tsāng stayed in these places for seven days during which period he paid reverence to these places. Thus Hsuan-tsāng has furnished an interesting account of this place and of changes which took place from time to time From there he went to Bodhagayā where he worshipped Bodhi tree,Vajrāsana etc and stayed for nine days On the tenth day he went to Nālandā in about A. D 637 where he resided for sometime in order to observe the things of his interest With the help of twenty Buddhist monk-scholars under the supervision of Śilabhadra Hsuan-tsāng saw all things at Nālandā Buddhabhadra, the nephew of Śīlabhadra and now a monk narrated the interesting story of his uncle Śīlabhadra was the head of Nālandā Mahāvihāra and he came in the direct line of the intellectual pedigree of Asanga and Vasubadhu's disciples. He summed up in himself the final result of seven centuries of Indian thought He was one of the greatest authorities on Yogāchāra doctrine of Buddhism of his time[1] Hsuan-tsāng resided in several Buddhist Vihāras at Nālandā in order to learn Buddhist ideas. He found it in a flourishing condition well-equipped with material requirements necessary for daily life. From his description it appears that Nālandā had a complex organisation of Buddhist monk-scholars, landed property, gold, money and food-grains. From Nālandā he went to Rājagṛiha which was also called Kuśāgrapura He visited Gṛiddhrakūṭa and other sacred

1. K. A. N. Sastri, 'Chinese Travellers', 2500 years of Buddhism, edited by P. V. Bapat, 1956, reprinted in 1964, Delhi, p. 289, spots around this place. He returned to Nālandā in order to learn Yoga-śāstra from Śīlabhadra. He also studied Nyāyānusāra-śāstra, Hetuvidyā-śāstra, Śabdavidyā, Prāṇyamūla śāstra-ṭīkā, Śata-śāstra and several controversial points of Vyākarana. In this way he attained a stage of perfection in original Baddhist languages and literature. In this way during the period of five years Hsuan-tsāng penetrated and examined completely all the collections of the Buddhist books and also studied the sacred book of the Brāhmaṇas.

From Nālandā he went to worship the Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara in the country of Hiranyaparvata. Hsuan-tsāng tried his fate through throwing a garland on the Bodhisattva from a distance and was overpowered with joy in anticipation of future successes He went further to the country of Hiranya where he met two eminent brothers, Tathāgatagupta and Kshāntisimha, both belonging to the Sarvāstivādin school. Hsuan-tsāng stayed there for one year and read the Vibhāśa and the Nyāya anusāra Śāstra etc.[1]

III

From Hiranyamukha country Hsuan-tsāng went to the kingdom of Champā[2] where he found many Vihāras and thousands of Buddhists living in them. From these places he went to Bengal, Orissa (Kalinga) and Amaiāvatī (Dhanyakaṭaka) in A. D. 639 At Amarāvatī he met two eminent Tripiṭakāchāryas Subhūti and Sūrya and stayed there several months for learning Mūlābhidharma. But Hsuan-tsāng did not feel himself to be satisfied

1. Here ends the Book III (From Ayodhya to Hiranyamukha).
2. Modern Bhagalpur region in Bihar State.

with what he learned and studied in different parts of India up to this time. He became keenly interested in Buddhist ideas as taught and interpreted in Simhala country and so he proceeded for that place through the Chola region, Kāñchipura where he fortunately met two Siṃhalese Buddhist monk-scholars Abhahadanshṭra and Bodhimegheśvara. From them he learnt that the king of Simhala died, the country was suffering from famine and was in a state of disorder Further they assured Hsuan-tsāng that among the members of their school there were none who excelled in age and position and so they could discuss what was required by Hsuan-tsāng. This interview with the Simhalese monk-scholars was sufficient for Hsuan-tsāng and he dropped his trip to visit that country. He went to Mysore where he saw panorama of scented wood and other allied products From Mysore he loitered for one year (A. D. 642) in western Indian regions and visited Bharuch, Malwa, Saurāshṭra, Gujarāt, Ujjain, and Kashmir among important places worthy of mention.

Hsuan-tsāng returned again to Nālandā where he revised his knowledge of Yoga-śāstra under Śīlabhadra. This time he remained there for about two years studying Vidyā-mātra-siddhi-śāstra, Yoga-sāśtra, Hetuvidyā śāstra etc. and became well-versed in several branches of Buddhist learning On one occasion in a discussion he cowed down Siṃhaśramī, an eminent Buddhist monk-scholar of Nālandā Finally he composed a śāstra-Hwui-Tsung in three thousand ślokas which was later approved by an assembly of Buddhist monk-scholars convened by Śīlabhadra. On the other occasion Hsuan-tsāng proved the superiority of his scholarship before a learned Brāhmaṇical scholar who had to become his slave because of his defeat in a debate. But Hsuan-tsāng showed his greatness through liberating him finally.

The Brāhmana, filled with joy, went forth to Kāmarūpa in eastern India, and told Kumārarāja about the high qualities of Hsuan-tsāng The king hearing of it was overjoyed, and immediately sent a message, bidding the Master of Law to come to him [1]

IV

Hsuan-tsāng now thought of returning to China as predicted by the Niragrantha relating to the return of Hsuan-tsāng to his home, but an impedement came in his way because of a pressing invitation from Kumāra Rāja,[2] the king of Kāmarūpa and the disciple of Śīlabhadra An interesting incident is that at one stage when Hsuan-tsāng declined to go to Kāmarūpa in spite of repeated persuation through Śīlabhadra, Kumāra Rāja wrote a letter to Śīlabhadra "In recent times Śaśānka-rāja was equal still to the destruction of the law and uprooted the Bodhi tree. Do you, my Master, suppose that your disciple has no power as this? If necessary then I will equip my army and elephants, and like the clouds sweep down on and trample to the very dust that monastery of Nālandā, these words (are true) as the Sun Master it is better for you to examine and see (what will you do).

At this threat Hsuan-tsāng was sent to Kāmrūpa where he was warmly received by the king and lived there for weeks. Then Harshavardhana also invited Hsuan-tsāng and correspondences started between Kumāra Rāja and Harshavardhana. At one stage when Kumāra Rāja replied, "He (Harshavardhana) can take my head, but

1. Here ends the Book IV (Beginning at Champā and ending with an Account the Invitation of the King of Kāmarūpa).
2. Bhāskaravarman of Kāmarūpa.

he cannot take the Master of the Law yet." Harshavardhana sent another letter to Kumāra Rāja mentioning "Send the head, that I may have it immediately by my messenger who is to bring it here" Kumāra realised his folly and immediately dispatched his royal preparations with Hsuan-tsāng and followed personally owing to regard for Harshavardhana

Hsuan-tsāng was received by Harshavardhana with high regard In a short conversation Hsuan-tsāng extolled the doctrine of Mahāyāna and exposed the extreme poverty of Hīnayāna which was keenly watched by the sister[1] of Harshavardhana, a lady of great intelligence who was distinguished for her knowledge of the Sammitiya-school doctrine Harshavardhana called a grand assembly at Kānyakubja attended by kings of eighteen states and commanded the Buddhist monks, scholars, Brāhmanas and other Lokāyata scholars of several kingdoms for exhibiting the victory of Mahāyāna as propounded and established by Hsuan-tsāng After a prolonged discussion, debate and pleadings the supremacy of Mahāyāna was established A vast number of men were converted to Mahāyāna Buddhism Opulent wealth, gold, silver, cloth etc were distributed in this connection, Hsuan-tsāng was placed on a decorated elephant and majestically was moved in the city of Kānyakubja with Buddha's relics and images On this occasion Hsuan-tsāng was given epithets of Mahāyāna Deva by the Mahāyānists and of Moksha Deva by the Hīnayānists After this Hsuan-tsāng was persuaded to attend the Mahāmokshaparishad, the great religious convocation which was to be held at Prayāga between the banks of the Ganges and the Yamunā, where during the period of seventy-five days Buddhists, Brāhmanas, orphans, the poor, destitutes, oldmen etc would be given sufficient gifts.

1. Rājyaśrī, the sister of Harshavardhana which remained unnamed by the biographer.

Hsuan-tsāng attended the Mahāmokshapariṣhad which was the sixth one (A D 643), five convocations at the interval of five years had already been celebrated in this manner.[1] He saw five lac of persons gathered there. Except the horses, elephants and military accountrements which were necessary for maintaining order and protecting the royal estate, nothing remained All being given away, Harshavardhana begged from his sister[2] an ordinary second hand garment and having put it on he paid worship to Buddha and expressed his humble feelings. Ultimately in A. D 643 Hsuan-tsāng was respectfully permitted to start for China His books, images, three thousand gold pieces and ten thousand silver pieces were carried on horseback under the military protection. In his return journey he met Simhaprbha and Simhachandra with whom he discussed Kośa-Samparigraha-Śāstra Vidyā-mātra-Siddha-śāstra, Yoga-Śāstra-Kārikā and Abhidharma-śāstra during two months at Virashana near Kauśāmbī He passed through Takshaśilā (Kaśmir) But while crossing the river Indus in a boat a storm arose because of which a little quantity of seeds of Indian products and fifty manuscript copies of Buddhist sūtras

1. Calculating backwards we can say that the first assembly held in A. D. 618 is equal to 675 V. S. Probably its divisibility by five may have been one of the reasons for starting the quinquennial function in 675 V. S.
2. Here again the sister of Harshavardhana remained unnamed.

were lost in it.[1] This time he did neither stay in the way nor could follow his old route. He reached his country in A. D 645 The people came to receive him in a large number so that Hsuan-tsāng was crowded from all sides [2]

CONCLUSION AND COMMENTS

Hsuan-tsāng was escorted by the members of various monasteries with flags and banners and was brought to the Buddhist Vihāra of Hong-fu where he deposited his books and images He refused several big offers and devoted his life to the work of translation At the request of the emperor he also wrote his Si-yu-ki, Buddhist Records of the Western World in A D 649 and ceaselessly worked on his mission of translation project He exercised a more potent influence over his generation than any of his contemporaries He organised regular lectures and assembly of Buddhist scholars for discussing Buddhist ideas among his disciples In A D 652 he received a delegation from the Mahābodhi temple of India under the leadership of Dharmārudha bearing letters and books from Hsuan-tsāng's old friends of India and conveyed his good wishes to them.[3] Three years later in A. D. 654, when Dharmārudha came back to India Hsuan-tsāng made a request before them for recovering the copies of fifty manuscripts lost in the Indus storm. Up to A. D 661 he completed his work of translation of seventyfour

1. Chin-keh-mu, op cit, p 65, "The fact that we are told that on the road he lost the seeds of some rare Indian plants shows that he took certain Indian products too."
2. Here ends the Book V (Begins with the prediction of the Nirgrantha relating to his return home, and ends with his arrival in China)
3. Chin-keh-mu, op cit., p 66.

distinct works in 1335 chapters Hsuan-tsāng stored the books and images he had brought back in a new pagoda which he himself helped to build [1] In A D 664 he died. In the year 669 his remains were removed by the order of the emperor to a place situated to the north of the valley of Fa-chuen where a tower was constructed in Hsuan-tsāhg's memory Chin-keh-mu mentions that as a translator Hsuan-tsāng was a great innovator too He made the most careful study of the works he translated . He laid down principles of translation, observing strict rules and carrying out systematic textual research himself, one of his translations made after collating the different versions He produced new versions of books inadequately translated before, and provided new Chinese expressions for many special Buddhist terms He set about his work scientifically and the translators under him worked as a team according to a definite procedure A translation was passed only after repeated discussion and checking, when it was genuinely faithful to the original and the language was clear and fluent [2]

From this biographical detail we get many interesting points of historical importance which furnish reliable evidence for reconstructing the history of the period While at Kapisā he saw a stūpa tumbled down [3] He found it historically significant and so personally he took interest in the work of its repair [4] He supervised the work of excavation and at the depth of seven or eight feet several things were found among which a great copper vessel containing several hundred catties of gold and many

1. Ibid , p 67.
2. Op cit , pp 60 6
3. Hui-li, p 55.
4. Ibid.

scores of pearls were important finds This piece of information is remarkable in the sense that Hsuan-tsāng was cautious with regard to historical materials

At the convocation held at Kanauj Hsuan-tsāng successfully established the supremacy of the Mahāyāna Buddhism This auspicious occasion was next only to the special council of the Buddhists convened by Kanishka when Buddhist scholars had come together to give a final shape to the schools of Buddhist thought out of which had emerged Mahāyāna

It is through the Hui-li's biography of Hsuan-tsāng that we come to know the importance of the sister (Rājyaśrī) of Harshavardhana First of all she is mentioned to have shown her great intellectual quality through her interest in Hsuan-tsāng's scholarship acquired in India Secondly, she is shown to have played an important role at the end of the Mahāmokshaparishad at Prayāga when Harshavardhana begged from her a second hand garment after distributing everything of his possession Born in A D 594 she was forty-nine years old at the time

The importance of this work may also be assessed from the fact that it is supplementary to The Record of the travels of Hsuan-tsāng K S Latourette mentions that the record of his travels is so full and accurate that in recent times it has proved of assistance to archaeologists in India and Sinkiang [1] The late Dr A S Altekar could successfully start archaeological excavatsons at Vaiśālī and Kumharār with the help of historical works among which this book of Hui-li was one Many remarkable historical remains were unearthed from these sites which helped in reconstructing the history of these regions Hsuan-tsāng was a brilliant scholar, trying to meet the new requirements of his age When he had studied in India for about fifteen years, his learning not only exceeded that of all the Chinese monks who had preceded him there but also was never equalled by any of his successors [1] All these points show that Hsuan-tsāng was the greatest scholar of his generation who had the power which separated him from all his contemporaries in creating a world of his own

1. K. S. Latourette, op. cit., p. 154.

1. Chin-keh-mu, op. cit., p. 58.

APPENDIX THREE

BIBLIOGRAPHY

(1) PRIMARY AND SECONDARY BOOKS

Alwis, Lectures

Beal, S Si-yu-ki, Buddhist Records of the Western World, translated from the Chinese of Hiuen Tsiang (A. D 629), Trubner & Co , London, 1884.

——— Travels of Buddist Pilgrims

Bruce, Itinerarium Septentrionale.

Burnouf, E., Introduction a I histoire du Buddhismus indien, Paris, 1844 (reprint, 1876).

Colebrooke, H. T., Essays on the Religion and Philosophy of the Hindus, London, 1858.

Darmester and Mills, Zendavesta

Eitel, Handbook

Hardy, R. Spence, A Manual of Buddhism, London, 1860 (a second ed 1880)

Haug Essays on the Parsees, Trubner & Co . London

Hodgson, B. H , Misellaneous Essays Relating to Indian Subjects, Vols I & II, Trubner & Co , London, 1880, Collected Essays in this book.

Julien, S., Histoire de la vie de Hiouenthsang et de ses voyages I dans, Inde, Paris, 1853.

Legge, J. A , A Record of the Buddhistic Kingdoms. Being an account by the Chinese Monk Fa-hien of travels in India and Ceylon (A D 399-414) in search of Buddhist Books and Discipline Translated and annotated with a Corean recension of the Chinese Text, Oxford, 1886

Mayer, Manual

Max Muller, F , India What Can It Teach Us, London, 1883

Max Muller, F (ed), Sacred Books of the East.

Mc Crindle J.W , Ancient India as Described by Ptolemy, Being a Translation of (the relevent parts of the) Geograhy, Calcutta, 1879

Mitra, R L , The Sanskrit Buddhist Literature of Nepal, Calcutta, 1882

Oldenberg H , Dīpavaṁśa, London, 1879

Rawlinson, H G , Ancient Monarchies

Rockhill, W W , The life of the Buddha and the Early History of His Order, London, 1884.

Schiefner, A , Tāranātha's Geschicte des Buddhismus in Indien (Translation of Tāranātha's History in German), St Petersburg, 1869

Stein, M. Aurel, A releveant article in Indian Antiquary, April, 1888

(ii) REFERENCE BOOKS

The Indian Survey Map.

Monier-Williams, M , A Sanskrit-English Dictionary, Oxford, 1899.

Nanjio, B. (ed.), A Catalogue of Chinese Translation of the Buddhist Tripitaka, the Sacred Canon of the Buddhists in China and Japan.

(iii) JOURNALS

Indian Antiquary.
Journal of the Pāli-Text Society.
Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society.

APPENDIX FOUR

INDEX

A

Abhayadanshṭra, a Buddhist priest of Simhala, 139

Abhidharma-jñāna-prasthāna-śāstra of Kātyāyana, 81

Abhidharma-kośa śāstra of Vasubandhu, 80

Abhidharma Piṭaka, a section of transcendental doctrine formed under the direction of Mahā-Kāśyapa, xxvi, 116, 117.

Abhidharma-prakaraṇa-śāsana-śāstra, 76

Abhidharma śāstra of Vasubandhu, 7, 8, 51, 76, 77, 86, 190, 210.

Abhidharma vibhāshā-śāstra 72.

Accadian, xxiv n.

Achala, a Buddhist monk of Āndhra, 136.

Āditya, Ādityadeva, the Sun-god, 152, 186.

Ādityasena, xxxvi

Afriti, xxii, xxiv.

A-fu, a fountain, 35.

Āgama, 51.

Ajātaśatru, the king of Rājagṛiha, 113, 115, 118.

Ajitavatī (O-shi-to fa-tai), a river in the Kuśīnagara region, 97

Alamkāra-Mahāyāna-śāstra, 85.

Alamana, xx.

A-li-ki-lo, Ārakan, xxxix.

A-li-ve-fa-mo, Aryavarmā of Sarvāstivādin school, 56.

Amarakova, xxix.

Amarāvatī, a Buddhist site, at present in Andhra Pradesh, 137 n.

Amardi, xxii.

Āmra (Mango), ix, 59, 74, 91, 100, 110.

Āmradārikā, the famous Ambapālī of Vaiśālī, 100, 102.

Amrāvat (Amarāvatī) xxiv, xxxvi.

Āndhra, 136.

Ānanda, the famous disciple of Buddha, xxxii, 71, 77, 98, 115, 116, 162.

Ānandapura, 150
Anāthapiṇḍaka, the chief minister of Prasenajita, helped the needy, destitute, orphan and old men, 84 n.
Anavatapta, a lake, 198
Angulimālya, follower of a violent robber who wore round his neck a string of fingers, later converted to monkhood by Buddha, 93.
Annam, xxxi n, xl, liv.
An-lo, 74
An-ta lo-fo-po (Atarva, Andarab), 195
Aparnī, xxii.
A-po-lo-lo, (Apalāla), 65.
Apsu, 35 n
Arab, xxii, xxix
Arakan, xxvi, xxxixix, xli.
Aramana, xx.
Arhat, a high rank of Buddhist monk, 66, 79, 92, 115, 116, 146, 152, 199, 201, 202, 206, 207, 208.
Arhatship, 78, 110.
Āryadāsa, a Buddhist priest of China belonging to Mahāsānghika school who helped Hsuan-tsāng, 53.
Āryamahāsangīti, a school of Buddhist thought, xlii.
Āryamūlasarvāstivādin, a follower of a Buddhist sect, xliii
Āryasammitīya, pertaining to a Buddhist sect, xliii
Āryasena, a Buddhist priest of China belonging to Mahāsānghika school who helped Hsuan-tsāng, 53
Āryasthavira, xlii.
Āryavarmā, a Chinese Buddhist of Sarvāstivādin school, 56
Āryavarman, a Corean Buddhist monk, left Ch'ângan in A D 638 came to Nālandā, copied many sūtras, died there at the age of seventy years, xxix
Asangha, the famous Buddhist philosopher o Gandhāra, 70, 85, 86
Asher, early Roman god xii.
Ashṭa-dhātu, a book on grammar, 122
Asita, rishi, 95.
Aśoka, the famous Maurya emperor (B.C. 269-232), x,xxiv, xxv, 67, 86, 101, 102, 134.

Aśoka-rāja, 58, 64, 68, 82, 84, 85, 90, 91, 93, 94, 97, 99, 115, 117, 118, 131, 132, 133, 135, 137, 144, 146, 147, 149, 150, 151, 152, 195, 203 Also see Aśoka.

Aśokārāma, a Sanghārāma named after the emperor Aśoka, xxv, 102 n.

Asura, demon, 137

Aśvaghosha, the famous Buddhist scholar belonging to the period of Kanishka, 199

Aśvajita, the Buddhist monk who preached the Law to Sāriputra 113.

Aṭali, a place near Multān, 149

Atharvaveda, 112.

Atyanabakela, 150

Avalokiteśvara, one of the Bodhisattvas 66, 108, 120, 125, 131.

Avaraśilā, a Sanghārāma in Dhanyakaṭaka region hewn out of the mountain side, 136.

Avīchi, a term for hell in the Buddhist cosmology, 89.

Ayodhyā, 85, 86.

B

Baal, early Roman god, xx.

Babylon, 151 n.

Babylonian, xii.

Baktra, xxxiii, 48, 49, 50, 51

Baktria (Bactria), 50 n, 202 n

Bālāditya, a king of Magadha during sixth century' A D, iii, xxxviii, 109, 119, 155.

Bālapati, 153.

Balārai, xxviii n

Balkh, a town of Baktria, xxxii, 49, 52, 57.

Bāmiyān, a town in Afghanistan where the rock-cut statue of Buddha is standing, 53, 54.

Banaras, 63

Baramoulogiri (Bhramaragiri), the hill of the 'Black-bee' or of Durgā, xxi n

Baroch (Broach, Bharuch), a town in Gujarāt, 147.

Behistun, name of a place in Persia, xxii.

Bengal, xii.

Bhadra, a devotee, 76, 94, 99.

Bhādra Kalpa, an idea of time known to the sages, 99, 103, 104, 138
Bhadraruchi, a Buddhist monk-scholar, 152, 153
Bhadra-vihāra, a Buddhist vihāra in Kanauj where Hsuan-tsāng stayed, 84
Bhandi, a minister in the court of Harshavardhana, 83 n
Bhāskaravarman, the king of Kāmarūpa, xxvi.
Bhattuddesako, 106 n.
Bhāvaviveka, a south Indian scholar of Sānkhya doctrine and a specialist of Nāgārjuna's philosophy, 137.
Bhikshu, 96, 113, 120, 151, — 181, 182, 183, 200, 201.
Bhikshunī, 71,93
Bhūta, 161, 162.
Bimbisāra, the king of Rājagṛiha 29, 101, 118, 119.
Bingheul, that is Mynbulak, a country with many lakes, lies to the north of the road from Aulie-ata to Ters in Central Asian region, 44n.
Bodhi, viii, 67, 87, 156, 158, 202, 206.
Bodhi-tree, x, xi, xii, xiii, xxx, xxxiv, xxxviii, xl, 104, 119, 163, 161
Bodhi (temple), xxxii, xxxv.
Bodhimandala, 104.
Bodhimeghesvara, a Buddhist of Simhala, 139
Bodhisattva, xxxiv, xxxv, xliv, 23, 39, 58, 62, 63, 64, 66, 67, 70, 73, 76, 77, 78, 83, 82, 85, 88, 90, 91, 92, 95, 99, 104, 105, 108, 109, 110, 120, 125, 131, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 145, 146, 153, 155, 169, 184.
Bodhisattva, Maitreya, xl.
Bodhisattva-Piṭaka, Bodhisattva - Piṭaka - Sūtra, 101, 215.
Bokhara, 46 n.
Brahma, 82.
Brāhmana, a non-believer in Buddhism, viii, xi, xii, xxi, xxxviii, 12, 16, 19, 31, 48, 59, 62, 73, 75, 76, 94, 109, 118, 120, 121, 122, 125, 136, 149, 159, 161, 164, 165, 176, 177, 178, 184, 186, 208.

Brāhmanism, xiii.
Brahmachārī, a staunch bachelor, 93, 106 n.
Brahmapura, town of Haridwar and the abjacent area, 81.
Brāhmanapura, town of Mālwā, 149.
Brahma-rāja, the legendary teacher of Brāhmanism, 121, 122, 177
Bruce, xxii n.
Buddha, viii, xi, xiii, xiv, xx n, xxii, xxiii, xxiv, xxv, xxvii, xxxi xxxv, xxxvi, xxxviii, xliv, 4, 15, 20, 29, 31, 35, 37, 39, 45, 49, 50, 51 n, 53, 55, 57, 58, 59, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 71, 73, 75, 76, 78 n, 81, 82, 84, 85, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 102, 104, 110, 113, 114, 115, 117, 119, 121, 125, 126, 129, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 139, 144, 145, 147, 148, 149, 151, 156, 158, 159, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 173, 174, 177, 178, 180, 181, 183, 186, 187, 190, 197, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 207, 210 n, 213, 214.
Buddha, Amitābha, xxxii.
Buddhabhadra, a Buddhist monk-scholar and the nephew of Śīlabhadra, an old Buddhist monk of Nālandā, 107, 109
Buddha-bhūmi-sūtra, 215.
Buddhacharita, the life of Buddha written by Aśvaghosha, 95 n.
Buddhadāsa, a Buddhist scholar who had composed Varṇavibhāsha-Vyākaraṇa, 84.
Buddhagupta-rāja, a king of Magadha during sixth century A. D, 110.
Buddhadharma, xxx.
Buddhism, vi, x, xi, xii, xiii, xliii, 3, 7 n, 22 n, 112 n,
Buddhist, v vii, xiv, xix xxi, xxii, xxvi, xlvi, 103, 103 n,
Burgess, Jass, xxii.
Burmah, xxvi, xli, xlii.

C

Cambodia xlii.
Camphor, 109, 140.
Canton, xxv, vxvii.
Caspian, xvii, xxiv.

Ceylon, xxvi, xxvii, xxxiii, xxxiv, xxxvii, xli, xliii, 137 n, 140, 210 n.

Ceylonese, xxiv

Cha-kiu-kia (Yarkiang) 202.

Chaitya, xxiii, xxxi.

Chakravarttin, 53, 206

Champā, Bhagalpur area, xlii, xliv, 128.

Champaka, a garden with a stūpa built by Aśoka in Prayāga, 90.

Chan-pi po-sha ki, 84n

Chandaka, (Chhandaka), charioteer of Siddhārtha whom he gave up all his belongings on the occasion of leaving his kingdom in search of Bodhi (knowledge), 97

Chandaneva-tree (Sandal wood tree), 140

Chandrabhāgā, the river Chenab in the Punjab, 72

Chandradeva, a place in China called Ping-chou, xxxi

Chandraprabha, a name of Buddha in legends, 67, 191

Chandravarmā, an eminent Buddhist priest of Nagaradhana Vihāra at Jālandhara where Hsuan-tsāng rested for four months, 77.

Chang, a Chinese term of measurement equivalent to ten feet, 35, 66.

Ch'angan, the capital of Honan province where Hsuan-tsāng's forefathers served, vi, vii, xxix, xxx, xxx, xxxvi, xxxvi, 5, 9, 1, 2, 16, 26, 44, 209

Chang-che (Śreshṭhin in Sanskrit and Seṭṭhi in Pāli), 50 n, 91 n, 118 n.

Chang-kong, the name of the earliest forefather of Hsuan-tsāng, 1.

Chang-tri, name of the second brother of Hsuan-tsāng, 3

Chañchā, a Brāhmana woman who slandered Buddha and later went to hell, 94 .

Charita-varmā, a Chinese Buddhist scholar called Sin-chin, came to India and lived and died in Sinche temple, north of the Ganges, xxxiv.

Che-hu(Ye-hu), 30n,
Che-kia-lo (Śākala), Sialkot, a town in Takka (the Punjab area), 73
Che-lan-ta (Jālandhara), 190
Che-no-to-na, 211
Che-shi, a stone-country, i e a place full of stones, usually meant as Tashkand, 45
Chen-chu (Ghāzipur), 100.
Chenāb, a river in the Punjab, 72 n
Cheng-kwang (A D. 627-650), a period of historical significance in China during the Tang-dynasty, xxxvii, xxx, xxxi, xxxiii xxxiii, 11, 209, 213 n
Che-ye-in-to-lo (Jayendra), 69.
Che-ye-pu-lo (Jayapura), Jammu area, 72
Chi-na-po-li, (Chīnapati), region in the Punjab, 76.
Chikitsāvidyā, medical science, 112.
Chi-hing, a Chinese Buddhist monk called Prajñā-deva, came to India, died in the the Sin-che temple, north of the Ganges, xxxiv.
Chi-li-tsa-ta-lo (Śrīkshetra), in Burma, 132
Chiliocosm, 31.
Chi-sz, a Chinese Buddhist, went to India through Śrīvijaya (Palembang), xli
Chi-yen, a Chinese Buddhist, 10
Chi-yuch, a newly converted Buddhist monk, 40
Chin, family name of Hsuan-tsāng 1
Chin-liu, native place of Hsuan-tsāng, 1
Chin-chow, 9
Chin-na-fan-tu (Jinabandu), 70.
Chin-na-ta-lo-to (Jinatrāta), 70.
China (Jina), 136.
China, iii, vi, xix, xxv,, xxvi, xxvii, xxix, xxx, xxxi xxxii, xxxv, xxxvi, xxxvii, xxxviii, xxix, xli, xlii, xliiin, xliv, 32, 46, 53, 70, 75, 88, 107, 108, 121, 156n, 161, 166, 167, 168, 170, 174, 176, 179, 181, 188, 190, 212.

China-deva-gotra, the offspring of the god China, 199
Chinese, v, vi, xxi, xxii, xxivn, xxvii, xxviii, xxxv, xxxviii, 18n, 22n, 24, 43, 44, 50n, 53n, 95n, 106n, 129n.
Ch'ing, 4.
Ching (peck), 109.
Ching-fa-tsong (treasure of the good law), the same as Śīlabhadra, 106, 153,
Ching-huan, 208.
Ching-shen-kwo, the Chinese high-commissioner, 3.
Chingan, a Chinese Buddhist priest, xxxiii.
Chingkias (Chudinkas), 162.
Chinta-deva, xxxiii
Chittavrmā, xxxii, xxiii.
Cho-tso, 208.
Chola, xx.
Chow-nan, 1.
Chu-po-pun-na (Dāvavana), xxix.
Chudinka, 161n.
Chulya (Chola), 137.
Chunda, a layman who invited Buddha to his house and gave him his last meal, 97.
Chung, 74.
Chung-kwan, a branch of Buddhism in China, xliv.
Chwang, 7, 105n.
Chwong-yan-king-lun, 154.
Cochin-China, xxxiii, xxxiv, xli.
Colebrooke H. T, 162n, 165n.
Condore. an island, xxv, xxxiv.
Confucian, vi
Corea, vi, xxix, xxxvi.
Coromandel coast, xx.

Dānapati, a religious patron, benefactor, 191.
Dārapati, xlii
Darmesteter, xxiiin.
Daśaśīla, ten virtues of Buddhist doctrine, 44.
Deva, Brāhmanical gods, 45, 58, 75, 76, 78, 82, 83, 90, 94, 100, 107, 121, 127, 132, 135, 137, 138, 145, 146, 147, 148, 177, 181, 199.
Devadatta, the cousin of Buddha, being the son of his uncle Dronodana, always plotted to kill Buddha, 93, 113, 131.
Devasena, a chief of Buddhist priests, 79, 175.

Devavarmā, a king in eastern India, xxxvii.
Dhammāsoka (Dharmāśoka), name of the converted Aśoka, 103 n.
Dhanapāla, an evil elephant instigated to kill Buddha, 113
Dhanyakaṭaka, Dharaṇikoṭa on the river Krishnā, 136.
Dhāraṇī-Piṭaka, 117.
Dharma, 90, 102, 117.
Dharma, a priest, 14, 15
Dharmagupta, a school of Chinese Buddhism, xliv, 65, 214.
Dharmapāla, an eminent Buddhist monk-philosopher of Nālandā, 92, 109, 138
Dharmapriya, a Buddhist monk, 51.
Dharmarāja, an epithet given to Buddha, 167
Dharmaśālā, a preaching hall, 69
Dharmasiṃha, a Buddhist monk, 48.
Dharmatrāta, a Buddhist monk, 63.
Dhātu Vṛitti, a branch of Buddhist learning, 122.
Dhruvabhtta, a king of Valabhi, 149, 185, 186, 189.
Dīpankara, an epithet given to Buddha, 58 60.
Dīpavaṃśa, xxv, 101n, 103n, 144 n.
Djundingas (Chudinkas Jutikas), ascetics with matted hair, 161 n.
Dravida, South Indian or non-Aryan region, 138, 146.
Durgā, a Brāhmanical female tāntric deity, xxi, 86.
Dvārapati (Sandoway or Sandowe in Burma), xxxv, 132.

E

Eden, xii.

F

Fā-hien, a Chinese Buddhist pilgrim, visited India, learnt here and collected Buddhist manuscripts, vii, xxi, xxvii, 10, 53 n, 81 n, 82 n, 91 n, 93n, 94 n, 95 n, 106 n, 128 n, 203 n.
Fa-hwa (name of a Sanskrit text), xxxiii, 114.

Fa-la-na (Varana), a kingdom in Gandhāra area, 139.
Fa-la-pi (Valabhi), in northern India, 146
Fa-k'-iu (Dharmatrāta), 63.
Fā-shin, xli.
Fa-ti, same as Yue-ti, Yue-chi, 46,
Fa-tsong, Śīlabhadra, a Buddhist monk-scholar of Nālandā, 107, 108, 109.
Fa-yen-na (Bāmiyān) 52
Fan (Brahma), 121, 210
Fan-chuen, a valley in China where a tower was constructed to Hsuan-tsāng's memory in A D 669, 218
Fanfu, mixed people, 117 n
Far East, v.
Fen-tsin, a Chinese place name, 26
Feng-teng, 27 n.
Feon-to, pagoda, 216.
Feu-tu, a stūpa, 24.
Ferdusi, xxiv n
Feridun, xxiii
Ficus Religiosa, peepal tree, xi.
Fo-ho-lo (Baktra), 48, 50.
Fong-huang-ling, duke of the kingdom of Liang, 212
Fo-lin, Byzantine empire, 151.
Fo-li-shi, 193.
Fo-lo-pa-ti (Bālapati), 153.
Fo-lo-shi-sa-tang-ha, Vardas thāna, 193,
Fo-shai (Śrīvijaya), Palembang, xxxix.
Fo-shi-po-lo, an island in South China Sea, xliii n.
Fuchau, xxxvi.
Fuh-sing, 208-

G

Gandhāra (Peshawar region), 63, 71, 85, 122.
Gandhārasanda, a Buddhist establishment, xxxvi.
Ganges, ix, xxviii, xxxiii, xxxiv, xxxvi, 78, 81, 82, 83, 85, 86, 90, 98, 100, 101, 127, 128, 131, 172, 184, 185.
Ganjam, in Orissa 159.
Gayā, nine miles north of Bodhgayā, in Bihar xxxvii, 33, 156, 158.
Ghaṇṭa, a bell, 106.
Ghāzipur, a town on the Ganges, 100.
Gobi, vii

Gomati, a temple at Khotan, 203 n.

Gopa, a Buddhist monk-scholar of Ayodhyā who composed Shing-Kian-in-shih-ben, 92.

Gopāla, 60.

Gośira, a noleman, 91.

Goshira, a sāmanta (feudal lord) of Kausāmbī who presented a garden to Buddha, 190.

Gṛiddhrakūṭa (Vulture Peak), a peak at Rājagṛiha where Buddha gave his sermons, xxix, 87, 114, 128 n, 206, 209, 214.

Gunabhadra, a Chinese Buddhist of Mahīśāsaka school, 56.

Gunacharita, a Buddhist Vihāra, xxxvi.

Gunaprabha, a Buddhist monk-scholar of Madāwar or Mundore, a large town in western Rohilkhand, near Bijnor who composed Tattva-Vibhangaśāstra, 79, 81, 152.

Gupta, 38.

Gurjjara, kingdom of the north Punjab, 150.

H

Haman, xli.

Ha-la-li (Hari), 189.

Hamsa, a stūpa, 119.

Han, a ruling dynasty of China 1, 52, 54.

Han-chuen, 6

Han-yang, 8

Hang-chow, 8

Hari, xii, 189.

Harshavardhana (A. D 606-647), the famous emperor of Pushyabhūti or Vardhana dynasty who hosted Hsuan-tsāng in India, 83

Hayamukha, a kingdom in north India, 36, 90

Hesperides, xii.

Hetuvidyā (Logic), 70, 112, 136, 154.

Hetuvidyā-śāstra, 121, 153, 214

Hi-chi-ta-lo (Ahikshetrā), Ahichchhatrā, 81.

Hian, a class of Chinese classics, 2

Hian-ta, a priest, 11

Hiddha, a city in Kabul, xiii.

Himatala, 181, Darah-i-aim in Badakhshan, 182.

Himālaya, xi, xiv.

Hi-Lo, Mount, 65.
Hi-mo-ta-lo (Himatala), 196.
Hi-tsun-che, 63
Hin-hiang-tin-fa-ming, a Buddhist scripture in Chinese, 121
Hing-kung, xxxiv
Hînayâna, xxxi
Hiranyaparvata, Monghyr region of Bihar 125, 127, 128.
Hiu, a Buddhist monk, 9
Hiuen-chin, a Buddhist monk whose Indian name was Prakâsamatî, xxvii, xxviii, xxix, xxx, xxxvi
Hiuen-hau, a Buddhist monk, xxx
Hiuen-ta, a Chinese Buddhist monk, xxxix, xl
Hiuen-tai, a Buddhist monk whose Indian name was Sarvajñânadeva, xxx
Hiuen-Tsiang, Chinese Buddhist monk (A D 602-664) who visited India and has left his travel account, v, vi, viii, ix, xiii, xix, xx, xxi, xxvi, xxv, xxvi, xxvii, xlii, 1, 2, 3, 4, 14, 16, 19, 20, 23, 24, 28, 31, 32, 37n, 38, 40, 44, 48, 54, 56, 70, 73, 91n, 109, 112n, 126, 133, 156, 158, 160, 166, 169, 170, 173, 174, 184, 188, 208, 209, 212, 213, 215, 216, 217n
Hiuen-tu, a passage of the ice-bound glaciers, 33 n.
Hiun-lu, a perfume tree, 149
Ho, a river in China, 4
Ho-han, 46.
Ho-kia tun, name of a princess in a central Asian ruling dynasty, 47
Ho-li-sih-mi-kia (Khwarazm), 46
Ho-linga, xxxiii.
Ho-lo-hu (Roh), Ragh in Badakhshan, 196.
Ho-lo-lo-kia (Ragha or Urgha), 211.
Ho-lo-she-pu-lo, Râjapurî, a small state near the Punjab, 72
Ho-mo (Ormuz), 151.
Ho-shen, xliii n.
Ho-si (Tangul) Tanggod, tribes of Tibetan blood and area covered by them, 19.
Ho-wang-ta, a tântric who met Hsuan-tsâng in his journey to India, 16.

Hodgson, B H., xxiii.
Honan, vi, xxvi
Hong-fu, a Buddhist monastery called extensive happiness where Hsuan-tsāng was welcomed after his return in China 213, 215, 216
Howorth, 181n
Hu, Uighur people, 31.
Hu-lu, a river, 13
Hu-mi, "an ancient province of Tukhāra noted for the ferocious character of its inhabitants", 197 n
Hu-shi-kien (Tuzgāna), an area north-west of Khorasan famous for excellent horses, 51
Hu-tsian, a tree, 149
Huining, a Chinese Buddhist priest, left China in A D 665, passed three years at at Kalinga, xxxiii
Hun-sin, an officer, 30
Hung-huri, a temple, 6
Hupeh, a place in China, xxxviii.
Hushkara, U-sse-kia-lo temple in Kaśmīr where Hsuan-tsāng was received by its king, 68.
Hwān-to-to, the capital town of a country (Tāmasthiti) on river Oxus, 197
Hwang-ti, the mythical heavenly or the first emperor of China, v.
Hwo, Kunduz 47, 195.
Hwui, father of Hsuan-tsāng, 1
Hwui-li, one of the disciples of Hsuan-tsāng who wrote his biography (see for its detail in appendix ii), v, vii, viii, xi, xix, xx, 91n
Hwui-lin, one of the disciples of Chinese Buddhist Hwui-wei at Liang-chow who accompanied Hsuan-tsāng but returned from the way to India, 13,14.
Hwui-Lun, a Chinese Buddhist, called Prajñavarmā, visited Amarāvatī and Nālandā, returned to Tukhāra temple, xxxvi.
Hwui-ming, xxxix
Hwui-nieh, a Chinese Buddhist, came to India in A. D. 638, visited Nālandā where he wrote Buddhist work, died the same year at about sixty years of age, I-tsing, later on, found his Sanskrit manuscripts at Nālandā, xxx

Hwui-sing, Prajñākara, an Indian Buddhist scholar of Takka (the Punjab) living at Baktra (Bactria), the little Rājagṛiha, accompanied Hsuan-tsāng upto Kapisā from where he went back to Balkh, 54

Hwui-tsung, a Buddhist work composed by Hsuan-tsāng in 3000 slokas, 158

Hwui-wei, a Buddhist monk, 13

Hwui-yen, a Chinese Buddhist monk who went to Ceylon, xxxiv.

I

I-gu, a place in central Asian region full of hills and deserted areas, 13, 15, 16, 24, 32.

I-hiuen, a Chinese Buddhist who visited India, xxxiii.

I-hwui, a man of Loyang, came to India for Sanskrit books, died while he was thirty years old. xxxv

I-li-iun, a Buddhist work in Chinese, 154.

I-Iwan, a place where Hsuan-tsāng was received in China after his return from India, 215

I-long, a Chinese Buddhist scholar of Vinaya pitaka, visited Ceylon, returned through Western-India where he died, xxxiii.

In-ming, a south-Indian Brāhmana scholar with whom Hsuan-tsāng stayed for a month for study, 136.

In-tu-kia-kwo, Sindhūka king, 44.

India, v, x, xiv, xix, xxii, xxiii, xxiv, xxv, xxvi, xxviii, xxix, xxx, xxxi, xxxii, xxxiii, xxxiv, xxxv, xxxvii, xxxviii, xxxix, xl, 21, 38, 40, 48, 59n, 62n, 67, 68, 72, 83, 86, 110 n, 111, 112, 120, 122, 132, 133, 136 n, 139, 141, 156n, 157 n, 158, 159, 165, 177n, 181, 185, 189, 190, 191, 202, 209, 210 n, 216, 217.

Indian, xii, xxvii, 80, 121, 124.
Indies, 148, 176, 184.
Indo-Scythian, 136n
Indus, xx, 216
Irrdhi (Hṛidaya), will force, 204
Iśānapura, a place in north-east India, 132
Iśvara-deva, Bodhisattva or Brāhhmanical god, 186
I-tsing, a Chinese Buddhist monk (A D. 672-694) who visited India just after Hsuan-tsāng, xxv, xxvi, xxvii, xxviii, xxix, xxx, xxxiii, xli, xlii, xliv, xlvi

J

Jālandhara, a place in the Punjab, xxviii, 76, 190
Jambira, a fruit, 109.
Jambudvīpa, Jammu region, xxxvii, xli, xliv, 81, 102, 128, 168, 169, 195, 198.
Japanese, xlvi
Jātaka, Buddhist scriptures, 84n.
Jātaka-malā-śāstra, 114n.
Java, xli, 188n
Jayagupta, 78.
Jayapura, Jammu region, 72.
Jayasena, a Buddhist monk of Rājajagṛiha, 150, 153, 154, 155.
Jayendra, a Buddhist Vihāra in Kaśmīr where Hsuan-tsāng stayed, 69
Jen-tang (Dīpankara Buddha), 58
Jeta, a royal prince of Śrāvasti, 93
Jetavana, a park in Śrāvasti where Anāthapindaka welcomed Buddha, 32
Jin-wang-pan-jo, a Buddhist sūtra (Nanjio's Catalogue, No 17), 29
Jinabandhu, a Buddhist monk-scholar of Kasmīr, 70.
Jinaputra, a Buddhist monk-scholar of the Punjab who wrote commentary on Yogāchārabhūmi Śāstra, 152.
Jinatrāta, a Buddhist monk-scholar of Kaśmīr, 70
Jīvaka, the celebrated physician, the son of Sālavatī, a courtesan of Rājagṛiha who built a preaching hall for Buddha, 114.
Jñānaprasthāna-śāstra, 76.

Ju-i (Manorhita), Kalpavriksha or wishing-tree, 63.
Jui-mo-to (Jumodha), a region near Baktra or Baktria or Bactria, 51.
Julien, S., xix n, xxi, 2 n, 17n, 23n, 27n, 30n, 33n, 43n, 47n, 53n, 57n, 65n, 72n, 78n, 82n, 84n, 91n, 95n, 101n, 102n, 104n, 106n, 109n, 123n, 132n, 134n, 153n, 155n, 157n, 161, 164n, 178n, 196n, 197n, 210n, 214n
Jumnā (Yamunā), a river, 78, 90, 184 n, 185
Jyotipāla, an incarnation of Buddha in legendary story, 99n
Jyotishka, an astrologer, 118.

K

Kabi, xxiii.
Kajūghira, a country in eastern India, 131.
Kalanda, a bamboo garden in Magadha, 114.
Kālāśoka, Aśoka before Kalinga-war, 101n.
Kalinga, Orissan kingdom during Asoka's time, xx, xxxi, xxxiii, xxxv, xxxviii, xli, 134.
Kalirāja, 63
Kalpa, an idea of time among the sages, 53, 58, 76, 94, 99, 121.
Kāmalankā, Pegu and the delta of Irāwādi, xxxiii, xxxviii, xlii, 132
Kāmarūpa, a place, famous for Tantra in Assam, xxvi,, 165.
Kanaka, a flower, ix, 111, 113
Kanauj, the capital city of the kingdom of Harsavardhana, 82.
Kanishka, the Kushana king of India, xx, xxii, xxiii, 63, 64, 71
Kāñchipura, Conjiveram in south India, 138, 139.
Kānyakubja, a Sanskritised name of Kanauj, 149, 176, 185
Kāpālika, a Brāhmanical tāntric sect believing in ghost forces, 159, 161, 162.
Kao-chang, xxxv.
Kaotsu, the founder of the T'ang dynasty, vi.
Kapath, a place at Gayā where legendary heavenly ladder stands, 33.

Kapila, founder of the Sānkhya doctrine, 27
Kapilavastu, the birth place of Buddha, 94
Kapiśā, Kabul, xxix, xxxvi, 44, 54, 60, 81, 192, 193, 209
Kapitha, a place in northern India, 81, 214
Ka-po-tih, 125
Karashar, a place in Central Asia, vlix
Kārikā (commentary), 98.
Karmadāna, subdirector of of a Buddhist Vihāra, xxxviii, 96, 106
Karna-suvarna, a small region in Bengal, 83, 131
Karpūra, camphor, 140
Kāshāya (Buddhist robe), 54, 65
Kashgar, 48
Kashgaria, vi.
Kaśmīr, xxviii, xxxii, 68, 75, 79, 80, 121, 160, 181, 183, 191, 192, 204, 206
Kāśyapa, an epithet applied to Buddha and his followers, 50, 94, 98, 99, 115, 116, 117
Kāśyapa, Tathāgata (Buddha), 201.
Kāśyapīya, a school of Buddhist idea, xliv, 65, 192, 214
Kātyāyana, author of Abhidharmajñānaprasthāna Śāstra, 51, 76
Kau-chang, country of Uighurs, 24, 37, 38, 43, 47, 64, 188, 208, 210
Kau fa-kao-sang chuen, (in two parts) An account of fifty-six priests or Buddhist converts who visited India and the neighbourhood from China and bordering districts during the latter half of the seventh century A D, xxvi, xxvii
Kau-tsung, a T'ang emperor, 215
Kaundinya, one among the five men whom Buddha taught at Saranath, 100.
Kauśāmbī, a Buddhist city near Allahabad (Prayāga), 91, 190, 211
Kei-chi (Gaz), a kingdom near Balkh, 52
Kei-lo-no-su-fa-la-na (Karnasuvarna), 131
Kei-ni (Kanaka), flower, 111.

Kei-pi-tha (kapitha), 81.
Kesh, a place near Kermina in Central Asian route, 46.
Khan, ruler of the Turks, 31, 36, 42, 43, 45.
Khettiya, 144n.
Khing, a direction in Chinese, 6
Khio-wen-tai, the king of Kau-chang, 24
Khotan, xliv, 48, 203 n, 205, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212
Khwārazm, 46
Ki-chen, a teacher of public morals, 208
Ki-kwei-ch-uen, a work in Chinese dealt with the method of time determined by water clock, xxxvii.
Ki-li-to-lo-kiu-to, (Gridd-hrakūṭa) 114.
Ki-po-kin (Yamgān), a place in Badakhshān, 197.
Ki-shu-ho-kie-lo (Kajūghīra), 131.
Ki-shwang-na kesh), 46.
Ki-to-mo-chi, red mud, 132.
Ki-yen (Kātyāyana), 6.
King-kia (Ganges), 184.
Kian-chan, xxxiv.
Kiau-shang-mi (Kauśāmbī), 91.
K'ie-cha, Kachchha in Gujarat, 146.
Kie-jo-kio-she-kwo (Kānya-kubja), 82.
Kie-ling-kia (Kalinga), 134.
Kie-pan-to, Kashgar and its territory, 199
Kie-sha (Kashgar), 198, 202.
Kih-fuh-to, boots made of leather, 151.
Kih-meh, a desert area in Central Asia, 41.
Kin, great-grandfather of Hsuan-tsāng, 1
Kin, a sound of music of the Turks, 43.
Kin-fu, a place in Central Asian route, xxvii
Kin-na-po-lo, Kong-kin-na-pu-lo (Konkanapura), a region near Golkonda, 146.
King, a Buddhist monk-scholar, 6
King-tu, a religious chief or head of Buddhist Vihāra, 5
King-chau (Śīlaprabha), a Chinese Buddhist monk-scholar, came to India through sea, visited Kalinga, Tāmraliptı, Vajrāsana, learned Kośa two years at Nālandā, went to Rājagṛiha and south India, xxxviii

Kıraıs, Kṛitya race of Kaśmīr belonging to Turkish origin 181 n

Kıstna, a river in south India, xxi

Kiu-che, a river in China, 52.

Kiu-che-lo (Gurjjara), 150

Kiu-chi (Kuche) Kingdom of Kauchang, the Turkish ruler, 30, 37, 38

Kin-lu-ka, (Kuruka), Kuru country, xxxvi.

Kiu-lu-kia, a temple near Mahābodhi at Bodhgayā built by the Kuru king for his Buddhist saints, xxxvi

Kin-lun (Kwa-lun) a place in the South-east Asian islands, xliii

Kiu-see, a district in China, 32.

Kiu-she (kośa) Śāstra, 9, 39

Kiu-she-kie-la-po-lo (Kuśāgrapura), original capital of Magadha, also called as Rājagṛiha and Girivraja, 113

Kiuen, 95n.

Kiuh-shwang-ni-kia (Kashnia), the town of Sogdh, halfway between Samarkand and Bokhara, 46.

Kong, grandfather of Hsuan-tsāng, 1

Kong, 6

Kong-kin-na-po-lo (Konkaṇapura), areas around Golkonda, 146n

Kong-u-to, (Konyodha), Ganjam, 134

Kongkanapura, Golkonda area, 146

Konyodha (Ganjam), 134, 159, 171

Kosha (Kośa), xxxviii, xli, 39, 51, 70, 121, 210

Kośa-kārikā-Śāstra, 80

Kośa-Śāstra 86

Kośa - samparigraha-Śāstra, 190

Kośala (Ayodhyā), xx, 134.

Kou-shih, vi

Kow-shi, 1

Kṛitya, a Turkish tribe in Kaśmīr, 181, 182.

Kshānti Rishi (Bodhisattva), 65

Kshattriya, a ruling tribe of ancient India, 54, 134, 146, 149, 153.

Ku-ki, ruins in Chinese, 91n.
Ku-koh (big shells), 198
Ku-lang-na (Kuran), a place in Badakshān, 197.
Ku-long, xli
Ku-lu-sa-pang (Krospam), a place in Central Asian rigion, 193
Ku-mo-lo-to (Kumāralabdha), a Buddhist monk of Sautrāntika School, 67, 56
Ku-shi-na-kie-lo (Kuśīnagara), 97
Kuchi, Kucha, 208
Kukālī (Bhikshunī), 93
Kukkutārāma, Buddhist Sanghārāma bulilt by Aśoka after his conversion to this faith, xxv. 102
Kulūta, Kullu region in Himachal Pradesh, 77.
Kumar, a river, 66n
Kumāra, Bhāskaravarman of Kāmarūpa, 166, 172, 173, 175, 177
[Kumāra-jiva, also known as Kumāralabdha, a great Buddhist monk scholar of Takshaśilā, the great scholar of Sautrāntika school, 199.[
Kumāra-rāja, Sri Harsha of Kāmarūpa, 165, 167, 169, 170, 179, 185, 186, 187, 189
Kunduz, a place on the southern bank of the river Surkhāb in Central Asian region, 147.
Kung-chow, a place in China, xxxix.
Ku-lun, a language of Central Asian tribe, xxxiv
Kung-ta-jin-mai (Mahāśāli rice), a rice offered to the greatmen, 109.
Kung Yang, a temple on mountain, xxxii
Kuruka (Kuru), an ancient Indian tribe, xxxvin
Kurukshetra, xxxvi
Kuśa, a grass, 113.
Kuśāgrapura, ancient capital of Magadha, also called as Rājagṛiha and and Giriyraja, 113, 114, 118
Kushāna, Yue-chi tribe of Central Asia, xxiv.
Kuśī (Kuśīnagara), the Nirvāna place of Budha, xxix, xxxv.

Kuśînagara, xxiii, xxiv, xxxv, 97n.
Kuśînârâ, 100
Kustan (Khotan), 202, 204.
Kusumapura, an ancient name of Pâṭalıputra, 101.
Kwaı-chau (Cochın-Chına), xxxiv, xxxv.
Kwa-Chow, 13.
Kur-tru, 37
Kwan-yın (Bodhısattva) 17, 21, 22, 23.
Kwan-tsen-tsaı (Avalokıteśvara or Bodhısattva), xxxv, 104.
Kwang-peh-lun (Śata-śâstra-vaıpulyam), 76.
Kwei-chung, a Buddhıst monk-scholar of Cochın-Chına, came to Indıa, vısited Bodhagayâ and dıed at Râjagṛiha ın Veluvana, xxxiv Kwo, 4.
Kwo-sse (Kośa), 154.
Kwo-tong-wang a monk, 26.
Kwoh, ancient sage of Chına, 6.
Kwoh-seh-to (khost), 195.

L

La-su-c' ha (for su-la-c' ha), Surâshṭra or Saurâshṭıa, 150.
Lahore, 74n.
Lamghâna, Lampaka ın Kabul, 57, 72
Lan-chow a cıty ın Chına, 11
Lan-po (Lamghân), Lampaka ın Kabul, 57, 72, 162
Lang-keı-lo (Langala), a ruıned cıty near Persıa, 150, 151.
Lankâ (Kâmalankâ), xxxviii.
Lankâgırı, 145
Lankâvatâra Sûtra, 145
Lau (tseu), a Buddhıst scrıpture ın Chınese, 7.
Legge, 81n, 93n, 95n,
Leou-lan, Navapura or Neapolıs, a regıon of uncıvılısed people, 32, 212
Lı, north-west ın Chınese, a measurement of dıstance ın Chınese terms, also a sound of Turkish musıc, 6, 43
Lı-chang, a Chınese Governor or religıous man, 14.
Lı-ta-lıang, the governor of Liang chow, 12.

Liang, 12, 31, 212
Liang-chow, an administrative unit in Kansu, 11, 12, 13, 14, 19
Lichchhavi, an ancient Indian ruling tribe of Vaiśālī, xxiii, xxiii, xxivn
Lih-shing, a prefecture in China, xxix
Lin-I (Champā), xli, xliv,
Ling, a mountain in China, 40, 41
Ling-ki, ice-bound glacier's region in Muzart pass, 33n
Ling-wan, a Chinese Buddhist priest, came to India, erected under the Bodhi tree a figure of Maitreya Bodhisattva, xl
Langkia (Kāmalankā), xxxiii
Liu-shih, a Chinese prefecture where riots had broken out during the time of Hsuan-tsāng, 5
Lo, a Chinese prefecture, 4, 31
Lo-to-wei-chi (Ractavati Sanghārāma), 132
Lokanātha, Lord of the world, Buddha, xxxviii
Lokāyata, a materialist sect in ancient India, xxviii.
Lokottara-vādin, a school of Mahāyāna Buddhist thought, 52
Long-wang, a district in China, 32
Loyang, a Chinese city during T'ang, xxviii, xxxv, 3, 19, 212, 214, 214,
Lu-shan, 7
Lu-hi-ta-ka (Rohitaka, red), a stūpa, 66.
Lu-i-yen, śāstras in Chinese, 214 n
Lu-le-na (Śrughna), Kalsi in Jaunsar district of Uttar Pradesh where an Aśokan rock edict stands, 78
Lung, a Chinese Buddhist monk (A D 627-650) came to north India, got a Sanskrit copy of Fa hua and died in Gandhāra, xxxiii
Lung-so (A. D 661), a Chinese year, 217
Ma-huan-chi, a man of Kau-chang sent to India by Hsuan-tsāng, 210.

Ma-yung, Chinese teacher of public morals, 208
Mādyamīka (Mādhyamika), xliv
Madhyānta-vibhaṅgha-śāstra, 85
Madyāntika (Madhyāntika), an Arhat, xxxii, 66, 71
Mae, a sound of the Turkish music, 43
Magadha, xliii, 101, 109, 113. 148, 150n, 153, 213, 214
Magic (Atharveda), 112
Mahā Kāśyapa, 115
Mahamokshaparishad, the great religious convocation called by Harshavardhana at interval of five years for seventy-five days in order to distribute alms and discuss religious issues, 83.
Mahā-prajñā-pāramitā-sūtra, 217.
Mahā prajñā, 114.
Mahābodhi, at Bodhgayā in Bihar, xxviii, xxix, xxxiv, xxxv, xxxvii, xxxviii, xl, xli, 216.
Mahābrāhma, Brāhmanical god, 82.
Mahāchampā, Siam, 133.
Mahāchīna, China, 68
Mahāparishad (Mahāmokshaparishad) 148
Mahārāja, the king Śīlāditya, 173
Mahārāshṭra, 146
Mahāśālī, a type of rice of high quality produced in Magadha which was offered to Hsuan-tsāng, 109
Mahāsamghika (a Buddhist sect), xliii, 53, 65, 70, 117, 136n, 137, 195
Mahāsattva, 67
Mahāsthavira, a head of the Buddist monastery, xliii.
Mahātara (Mahattara), an officer, 189.
Mahāyāna, xxxiv, xl.
Mahāyāna-Deva, i e. Deva of great Vehicle, an epithet given to Hsuan-tsāng by the Mahāyānists at Kanauj, 181.
Mahāyāna Śāstra, 4
Māhāyana - samparigraha-śāstra, 6, 86, 157, 210
Mahendra, the son of Aśoka sent to Ceylon for propagating Buddhism, 144.
Maheśvarapura, a place in in Central India, 150

Mahîśāsaka, a Buddhist school, xlv, 7n, 56, 65, 86, 214.

Maitreya, xiv, 39, 66, 67, 79, 85, 88, 105, 108, 137, 138, 146, 217.

Maitri (Maitreya Bodhisattva), 99

Maitribalarāja, an incarration of Tathāgata Budda in legndary story, 66.

Makan (Takla), a desert, 18n.

Malacca, straits of, xli.

Malakūṭa, a place in south India near Conjveram, 140.

Mālava, inhabitants of Mālavā, 148, 150n

Malaya, mountainous district in south India, xxxi, xli

Malayagiri, the region around present Mysore town, 140,

Malla, the name of a people and their country The country is included in in the sixteen Mahājanapadas of Buddha's time. The kingdom, at that time, was divided into two parts, having their respective capitals in Pāvā and Kusinārā. Later these Mallas lost their indentities with the rise of monarchical states under the Mauryas and the Guptas, xxiv.

Mandaka, a form of letter-groupings in Grammar, 122,

Man-Yuen, xxxix.

Mañjūśrī, 77,103, 155.

Mankalai (Mungali), Mung-kie-li, a place in Udyāna, 65 n

Manojñaghosha (Mo-nu-jo-kiu sha), a Buddhist scholai of three Pitakas living at Balkh (Bactria), 56

Manu, the founder of the Brāhmanical legal system (Manusmṛiti), xii.

Māra, generally regarded as the personification of Death, the Evil one, the Temper (the Buddhist counterpart of the Devil or Principle of Destruction), 140

Māra,-rāja, king of Death, the Yama, 101.

Marāṭhā, the people of Mahārāshṭra, xxviii, xlii.

Mars, xxiv,

Maruta, the god of wind, xxii

Mathurā, 77.

Matipura, the Rohilkhand region, areas in and around Bijnor district of Uttar Pradesh, 79

Matisiṁha, a Chinese Buddhist Bhikshu, came to Sin-che temple, but returned homeward because of little progress in Sanskrit, died in Nepal at the age of forty, xxxii

Maudgalyāyana, an eminent Buddhist monk-scholar born at Nālandā and one of the earliest followers of Buddha, 77, 91, 106.

Māyā, the mother of Buddha, 81, 95

Max Müller, 83n, 110 n. 155n.

Mayers, 6n, 7n.

Mcrindle, xxii, xxiv.

Mei-ta-li (Maitri), Maitreya Bodhisattva, 99.

Menander, an eminent Indo-Greek king (155-130 B. C·) ruling the Swat valley, the Hazara district and the Punjab, attained fame in the Buddhist text Milinda-Panho, a discussion between Menander and Buddhist philosopher Nāgasena, xxn

Manipur, a famous ancient Indian town in the north-eastern frontier region, x,

Mi-li-ku, frontier land, Mlechchha lands of uncivilised, 57.

Mi-sha-seh, Mahīśāsaka school of Buddhism, one of the four Buddhist schools mentioned by Fā-hien and noticed by Hsuan-tsāng, a school founded on the occacion of the Buddhist Counsil convoked by Aśoka, 56.

Mihirakula, 64n.

Min (North-west China), 6,

Ming-hien, a Buddhist Bhikshu of Nālandā who helped Hsuan-tsāng, 179.

Ming - Yuen, a Chinese Buddhist scholar, visited Kalinga from where he went to Ceylon, xxxiii, xxxiv.
Mithra, xxiin
Mitra, R. L,, 99n,
Mitrasena, a Buddhist monk-scholar of Kapiśā, disciple of Gunaprabha, a famous Tripiṭakāchārya, with whom Hsuan-tsāng stayed to study, 81.
Mlechchha, uncivilised people, 57, 161.
Mo-cha-kiu-to (Mokshagupta, or Mokshakūṭa), 37.
Mo-ho-siu, an island in the south China sea, xliiin,
Mo-ho-ta-lo (Mahātara), official guides, 189
Mo-kia-man, xliiin.
Mo-kia-yen, a desert, 13, 18n, 21.
Mo-la- po (Mālava), inhabitants of Mālawā, 148.
Mo-lo-yu (Malaya), xxxix, xliii.
Mo-to-ta-kwan, an officer to prepare letters of commendations for different countries and to accompany the Master to the kingdom of kapiśā, 44.
Mocha Deva, Mokshadeva, xxxiv,
Mocha (Moksha), 100.
Moga, 18n,
Moksha, 148, 184.
Moksha Deva, i, e. the Deva of deliverence, an epithet given to Hsuan-tsāng by the Hīnayānists on the occasion of the great assembly of scholars at Kanauj where the Chinese pilgrim established the superiority of Mahāyāna Buddhism, 181.
Mokshagupta, a Buddhist monk-scholar residing in 'O-she-li-ni (Asādhārana Vihāra), at Kucha, in the Turkish Kingdom, viii, 37, 38, 39, 40.
Moksha Mahādāna, a great assemhly for bestowing charity, 193.
Mokshakūṭa (Mokshagupta), 37.
Monier, Williams, M., 111n.
Mu-lo-san-po-la (Mūlasthānapura), Multan, 152.
Mo-to-lo (Mathurā), 77.

Mūlābhidharma, 137.
Mūlābhidharama-śāstra, 153.
Mulagandhakuṭī, a Buddhist shrine at Nālandā, xxxviii
Mūlasthānapura (Multan), 152.
Mūlasarvāstivādin, adherent of one of the early schools of Buddhist doc, trine, xliv.
Multan, 152.
Mung, xxviii, xxix.
Mung-kie-li, (Mungali), a place near Udyān, 65.
Mung-kin (Munjan), a place in Badakshān, 196.
Mungali, a place near Udyān, 65, 66
Muzart pass, 53n,
Myn-bulak, a place of thousand springs in Central Asian route, 44n.
Murdhaj (head-born), 204.

N

Na-fo-po (Navapa), Navapur or Neapolis, 212.
Na-kie-lo-ho (Nagarahāra), a place in the Jalalabad valley on the bank of the Kabul river, 57.
Na-lo-sang-ho, a village in the Punjab, 73.
Na-lo-yen-ti'en (Nārāyaṇa Deva), a Brāhmanical god, 63
Nāga, x, xiii, xxiv, 96, 99, 100
Nāga Bhushana, a name of of Śiva, xii.
Nāga lake, 71
Nāgapatam, a town in South India, xxvi,
Nāgasena, a Buddist philosopher who disputed with the Indo-Greek king Manander, xxn.
Nagaradhana, a Buddhist Vihāra in Jālandhara, 76
Nagarahāra, a place in the Jalalabad valley on the bank of the Kabul river, 57, 214
Nāgarāja, 60.
Nāgārjuna, a Bnddhist philosopher of Mahāyāna school, xx, xxvi, 44n, 76, 135, 199.
Nag-vandana (Nāgapaṭam), vli.
Nairanjāna, (Ni-len-shan or Niranjanā), a river in Gayā associated with the life of Buddha, 103.

Nālandā, the famous Buddhist centre of learning in Bihar, ix, xix, xxviii, xxix, xxx, xxxi, xxxv, xxxvii, xxxviii, xl xli, xliii, 105, 106, 110, 112n, 113, 118, 120, 153, 155, 157, 159, 160, 161, 171, 177, 179, 183

Nan-he-ki-kwei-niu, xlv,

Nan-hae-ki-kwei-niu-fa-ch' uen, xlii

Nanda, xxxviii

Nanjio, xlvi, 29n, 162n.

Narmadā, a river near Jabalpur town of Madhya Pradesh, 147

Narasiṁha, a village in the Punjab, 73

Nārāyana Deva, a Brāhmanical god, 63.

Nārikīra an island in the Indian ocean, 145

Nepal, xxviii, xxx, xxxi, xxxii, xxxiii.

Ngai-chau, a place in China, xxxiv,

Ni-jang, a prefecture in China, 211.

Ni-len-shan (Nairanjāna), 103

Ni-mo, a prefecture in China, 211

Ni-mo-to (Narmadā river), 147.

Niau-lui, a prefecture in China, xxxiii.

Nidhog, xii.

Nikāyas, eighteen schools of the Buddhist thought, xlii.

Nirgrantha, Digambaras or the naked sect of the Jaina, 161, 162, 166, 167, 177, 185

Nirvāna, the time of death of Buddha, xl, xxn, xliii, 4, 20, 50, 53, 71, 76, 85, 96, 97, 98, 100, 101, 102, 104, 110, 112n. 115, 136, 144, 162, 201, 202 206, 211,

Nirvāna-śāstra, 7

Nirvāna-sūtra, 7, 11, 12.

Nu-chih-kie, a prefecture of China, 45.

Nutmeg, 109

Nyagrodha, a grove of fruits, 99.

Nyāya-anusāra-śāst a, of Sanghabhadra, 70, 80, 121, 127

Nyayādvāra-tāraka - śāstra, 76, 139

O

O-ch'a-li (Aṭali) a place north of Kachchha in Gujarat, 149.

O-fan-ch'a (Avanda), Avanti, 151.
O-ki-ni, Karshar or Karashahr near the lake Tenghiz (Bagarch) beyond Persia, 34, 35 ,37
O-li-ki-lo, xli
O-li-ni (Ahreng), a district on both sides of the river Oxus, 196
Oldenberg, 10ln
O-po-kin (Avakan), 193
Orissa, 133, 134, 154, 159, 160, 164
Ormuz, a place on the eastern frontier of Persia, 151.
O-shi-to-fa-tai (Ajitavatī , river in Chinese, Wu-shing which means invincible, 97
'O-she-li-ni, a Buddhist Vihāra which means an extraordinary or the unique Vihāra (Asādhāraṇa Vihāra), where Mokshagupta was living in Kuche, 38, Oxus, 47, 48, 196, 197, 198
'O-ye-mu-khi (Hayamukha), a place in north India, 86.
'O-ye-muh - khi (Hayamukha), 90
'O-yu-to (Ayodhyā), 85.

P

Padmarāga, a kind of jewel, 144.
Palāśa, a tree of Brahma, xii, 73.
Palembang (Śrīvijaya) a town in Sumatra, xxv, xxvi.
Pallava, a ruling dynsty of south India, xx
Pamir, 197, 209
Pan an animal god, xiii.
Pan-jo-king (Prajñāpāramitā), 12
Pan-jo-sin-sūtra (Prajñāpāramitā - hṛidaya - sūtra), 76
Pan-to (Buddha), 15
Panchaskhanḍa Śāstra, 76,
Pānini, the famous Sanskrit Grammarian, 122
Panma - purāna, Padma-purāna xii.
Parākaravardhana (Prabhākaravardhana), the father of Harshavardhana belonging to Pushyabhūti dynasty or Vardhana dynasty, 83.

Pari-nirvāna, the death of Buddha, xxxv, 116.

Pārśvika, a Buddhist monk of Purushapura or Peshawar, the famous Pārśva who presided over the Council of the Buddhist monks convoked by Kanishka, 63, 71.

Paryātra, a region west of Mathurā, Vairāṭa or Bairāt, 77

Pāṭali tree, 101

Pātaliputra, ancient name of Patna, also called Kusumapura, 101, 118.

Patna, xxiv, xxv

Pausanias, 203n,

Peck, 109

Pegu (Kāmalankā), 132.

Peh-lun (Śata-śāstra), 76

Peh-shwui (white water), name of a town, 45

Pekenese, xiii

Persia, xxiii, 62n, 143, 150

Persian, xxxix, 152n

Pi-lung, the private name of a Chinese, called Wang, 20.

Pi-lo-na na (Pi-lo-shan-na, Vīrasana), a place west of Mathurā, 81, 90.

Pi-ni-to-poh-la-po (Vinītaprabha), a Buddhist monk-scholar of the Punjab, 39.

Pi-sha (Vibhāśā), 39.

Pi-sha-man (Vaiśravana), a Brāhmanical deity, 203.

Pi-shu-to-sang-lo (Viśuddhasimha), a Bnddhist-monk of Kaśmīr, 70

Pi-so-kia (Viśākhā), a Buddhist lady of Śrāvasti who helped the Buddhists, 92.

Pi-tan (Abhidharma-śāstra), 6.

Pi-to-shi-lo (Pitāśīla), a region near the Indus river, 151

Pih (Prānyamūla and Śataśāstra), 75

Pih-li,a town, 25

Pimo, a town, 211

Pin, a teacher, 9

Pin-chin (Tattva-vibhāśā-śāstra) composed by Gunaprabha, a Buddhist monk-scholar of Rohilakhand region, 79

Pin-long-tseu (Puga, arca nut), 109

Ping-chau (Chandradeva), a specialist of Law, xxx, xxxi

Ping-yu-Myu-bulak (Bingheul,) a country with "thousand-springs", 44, 45.

Pi-po-lo, Pippal tree, 63, 104

Piṭaka, a complex Buddhist scriptures, well known as Tr piṭaka, xix, 50, 56, 71, 84, 115, 117, 153, 208.

Pitāśīla, 151

Po-chi-sha (Vāśibhāsanghārāma), "the convent which has the brightness of fire, 131

Po-chu, Simhala, 141, 143, 144

Po-fa-to-lo (Parvata), a region in the Punjab, 152

Po-kia-i (Bhagpa), a town in the Central Asia, 204.

Po-la-sse (Persia), 150

Po-lai-na-se (Vārānasī, an ancient town in the Uttar Pradesh, 63

Po-li, a town beyond the north-west frontier of India 50.

Po-li-ho (Parika), Farokhar, region in Badakhshān, 196.

Po-li-ye-ta-lo (Paryātra), west of Mathurā, 77.

Po-lo-che (Palāśa tree), 73.

Po-lo-hi-mo-pu-lo (Brahmapura), the Kumau-Garhwal region, 81.

Po-lo-ni-sse (Vārānasī), 98.

Po-lo-mo-lo-ki-li (Bhramaragiri), xxi

Po-lo-ye-kia (Prayāga), an ancient town in the Uttara Pradesh, 184

Po-lo-yue, xxi,

Po-lo-kie-chen-po (Baroche or Broach), an ancient Indian town on the western coast, 147.

Po-lu-lo (Bolor), 198.

Po-lu-sha-pu-lo (Purushapura or Peshawar), 63

Po-lu-sse, xxx, xliin,

Po-sih-kie-lo-fa-ti, 64.

Po-su-mi-to-lo (Vasumitra), the famous Buddhist monk-scholar of Kaśmīr, 70

Po-to-na (for, Po-to-chang-na), Badakhshān, 196

Po-tsu, the Oxus river, 46

Poh-lu-kia (Bālukā or Aksu) the name is derived from a Turkish tribe which "in the fourth century of our era occupied the north-western parts of Kansu", 41.

Prabhāpāla, Bodhisattva, 99.
Prāgbodhi, a mountain,213.
Prajāpati, a Bhikshunī, the elder maternal aunt of Buddha, 93
Prajñā (Pāramitā), 217
Prajñābhadra, a renowned Buddhist priest of Nālandā belonging to Sarvāstivādin school, 153
Prajñā Deva, a Buddhist scholar of China, called chi Hing in Chinese, came to India at Nālandā where he died aged about fifty years, xxxiv, xli.
Prajñāgupta, a Brāhmana scholar of Nālandā who was defeated by Hsuan-tsāng in a debate, became a slave, later released by the Chinese pilgrim, went to Kāmarūpa and told Kumāra-rāja about the high qualities of the Master of the Law (159-165 pp), 159
Prajñākara, a Budhist monk scholar of Takka (in the Punjab) living at Baktra (Balkh), accompanied Hsuan-tsāng up to Kapisā from where he returned to Balkh, 50. 52, 54, 56, 57.
Prajñāraśmī, a Buddhist scholar of Nālandā, 160.
Prajñā sūtra, xxxi.
Prajñāvarmā, a Chinese Buddhist monk-scholar, came to India, visited Nālandā and Amarāvatī and returned to China, xxxvi
Prakaraṇa pāda-vibhāṣā-śāstra, 77
Prakaranārya āchā - Śāstra-kārikā, 86, 91.
Prakāśamatī, Indian name of Hiuen-chiu, xxii (see Hiuen Chiu)
Prānyamūla, 75
Prānyamūla-śāstra, 157,158.
Prānyamula-śāstra-ṭīkā,121.
Prasenajita, the king of Śrāvastī who had hosted Buddha, 29, 92, 93.
Praśikshā-satya-śāstra, 153.
Pratyeka Buddha, 53
Prayāga, an ancient town of the Uttar Pradesh 90, 184, 190, 209.
Pu-ho (Bokhara), 46.

Pu-nu-tso, Punach or Punats, a kingdom on the borders of Kaśmīr, 72.
Pu-na-fa-tan-na (Pundravardnana), a kingdom in Bengal, 131.
Pudra, an Indian tree, xii.
Puga, areca nut, 109.
Puh-Chu-ni-pan-shih--i--yin-un-lun, 154
Pulakeśi (Pulakeśin), the Chālukya king of Mahārāshṭra, 147n.
Punach, 72 (see Pu-nu-tso).
Pundravardhana, a kingdom in Bengal, 131.
Pūrnamaitreyāniputra, a Buddhist monk of Śurpāraka (Supārā or Sopārā), 77
Pūrnavarmā, Pūinavarmarāja, the king of Magadha, the last of the race of Aśoka-raja of the Maurya dynasty, 119, 153, 154.
Purushapura (Peshawar), 63n.
Purvaśīlā, a monastery in Dhanyakaṭaka (Amarāvatī region) in Āndhra Pradesh, 136.
Pushkalavati, the capital of the kingdom of Gandhāra, 64.

Q

Quedah (Keddah), a coastal town in Sumatra, xxvi, xxxix, xli.

R

Rāhula, the son of Buddha, later became a Bhikshu, 77, 118, Rājabhat, xl
Rāja-bhoja, xxxvii
Rājagṛiha (Also see Gṛiddhrakūṭa), xxxiv, xxxviii, xxxix, 48, 101, 102, 113, 117, 118, 119, 128n, 209.
Rājapurī, the kingdom of Rājauri, south of Kaśmīr, 72
Rājpūt, Bais, 83
Rājyavardhana, the elder brother of Harshavardhana, 83
Raksha (Rākshasa), the demon, 143, 144.
Raktaviṭi (Raktavatī), a Sanghārāma in Karnasuvarna, 132
Rāma, 96
Rāmagrāma, 96.
Rarasvita, xi.

Ratnākara, a resident of Vaiśālī, 100.
Ratnakūṭa-sūtra, 216
Ratnapāla, name of the treasure-protecting drunken elephant wishing to kill Buddha with the consent of Devadatta and Ajātaśatru, also called Vāsupāla, 113n
Rawlinson, H G , xxiii
Rig-veda, 106n.
Rockhill, W. W., 113, 205n, 210n.
Rohitaka, red colour, 66.
Rubruquis, 111n.

S

Sa-mo-kien, a hilly region called "the happy country", Samarkand, 45
Sa-po-to, 56
Sa-ta-ni-shi-fa-lo (Sthāneśvara), 178.
Sa-to-po-ho (Sadvāha), the king of Kośala, 135
Śabda-śāstra xl
Śabda-vidyā, xxix, xxxix, 112, 121, 153
Śabdāvidyā-śāstra, 214.
Śabdavidyā-samyukta śāstra, 139.
Śabdavidyā-sūtra, 38.
Saddharma, 82.
Saddharma-piṭaka, 160.
Saddharma-puṇḍarīka, 114, 214
Saddharma-samparigraha-śāstra, 153,
Sadvāha, king of Kośala, xx, xxvi, 135.
Sāgaramati, a Buddhist monk-scholar of Nālandā, 160
Sai-tsin, a Chinese Buddhist teacher, 5, 6
Saicha, a state of attainment of wisdom, 117n.
Śākala (Sialkot), in the Punjab, 73.
Śakra, Devendra or Indra, a Vedic deity, 82, 177
Śakradeva, Indra, 82
Śakrāditya, an ancient Indian king associated with the foundation of Nālandā monastic establishments, xxn, xxxvii, 110
Śakra-rāja, a Sanskrit Grammarian of Kapiśā, 122
Śākya, a ruling tribe of the northern India which produced Buddha, xxn, 4, 9, 53, 64, 76, 77, 95, 151. 211.

Śākya Bodhisattva, 58
Śākya Muni, Buddha, 201
Śākyaputra, Buddha, 164.
Śāla, a tree, 97.
Śālātura, a town in the Gandhāra kingdom, 122.
Samarkand, xxxv.
Samataṭa, eastern Bengal, Samotaṭa or "the shore country" or "level country" It is named by Varāha Mihir along with Mithilā and Orissa, 132, 133.
Sammitīya, a school of Buddhism, xliii, xliv, 92, 104, 131, 148, 149, 153, 159, 179
Samotaṭa, xl, xlii (See Samataṭa)
Sāñchi, Buddhist Stūpa in the Madhya Pradesh, xxl, xxiiin
Sandoway (Sandowe), in Burma, Dvārapati, 132
Samgha, Buddhist monastic organisation, 90, 102
Sang-ho-po-lo (Simhapura), Khetās or Ketaksh in the Punjab, a Jaina pilgrimage, 67
Sang-yui, xxiin.
Sanghabhadra, author of the Kosha-kākrikā-śāstra and Nyāyānusāra-śāstra, 79, 80, 81
Sanghārāma, Buddhist monasteries or convents, 49, 50, 51, 53, 57, 64, 66, 67, 68, 71, 73, 76, 77, 79, 81, 82, 83, 85, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 96, 97, 98, 99, 101, 103, 110, 111, 112, 119, 125, 128, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137n, 138, 144, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 181, 182, 195, 197, 199, 205, 207, 208
Sanghavarmā, xxxv
Sānkhya, a philosophical system, 112, 152, 162
Sānkhya-kārikā, 162.
Sānkhya-śāstra, 163.
Sanscrit (Sanskrit), v, vi, xxvi, xxvii, xxviii, xxx, xxxi, xxxii, xxxiii, xxxiv, xxxv, xxxviii, xl, 210n.
Sāriputra, one of the earliest disciples of Buddha, 77, 94, 113.
Śarīra, a term denoting parts of the body of Buddha, 67, 96, 156
Sarvajñadeva, xxx.

Sarvāstivādin, follower of the Hīnayāna school of Buddhism, which was popular in north India, xliii, xliv, 56, 65, 70, 76, 79, 80, 86, 98, 127, 132n, 151, 153, 205, 214.
Sarvārthasiddha, a legendary name of Buddha, 206.
Śaśānka-rāja, the king of Karnasuvarna, 83, 171.
Śatadru, the kingdom on the river Śatadru. 77,
Sattapanni (Saptaparnī), a sacred tree, 115n.
Śataśāstra, 75, 76, 90, 121, 139, 157, 158
Sautrāntika, a Buddhist follower of this school, 67, 79, 199-
Schiefner, xxn, xxi
Sen-chi, xl
Sekha (lotus), 116
Seṭhi, rich man, 50.
Sha-chow, 212.
Sha-ho, a sandy desert, 21.
Sha-lo-kia, 54, 57.
Shaman (Śramana), Buddhist Bhikshu, v, xi, xxvii, 132.
Shang, a teacher, 9.
Shang-king, xxxix, xli.
Shang-mi (Śāmbhī). 197.
Shang-no-kia-so-sha (Śāṇakavāsa), 53.
Shāng-tih, xxxi.
Shaṭamukhī-dhāriṇī, 215.
Shaṭapadābhidharma, 51.
Shaṭapadābhidharma śāstra, 121
She-to-tu-lu (Śatadru), 77.
She-wong-ti, a Chinese emperor (B. C 221), 174
Sheh (Sheikh), the Turkish Chief, 48, 49
Shehing, xl.
She-hu, a Turkish chieftain, 196
She-hu-khan, a Turkish chief, 196
She-She,name of a river in Central Asia, 45
Shen-shen (Government in the Chinese term), 210.
Shi 15
Shi-ki-ni (Shikhnān), 197.
Shi-li-so-you (South-east Asian island-group, specially Śrīvijaya),xliiin.
Shi-li ki-li to-ti (Śrīhṛṭāli,) 202n
Shi-li-so-shi (Śrībhoja or Śrīvijaya). xxxiv.
Shi-lo-su-shi-ti (Śrāvasti), 92.

Shi-lun (Mahāyāna-samparigraha-śāstra), 6, 8, 12.
Shi-ta-lun, the garden of Jeta, 9.
Shi-tsin-pu-sa (Vasubandhu Bodhisattva), 10
Shi-yeṇ-to-kia (Sindhūka ?), xx
Shin, a monk, 9
Shing, a pint, 84n.
Shing-i-tai-lun (Parmārtha-satya-śāstra), a treatise of Buddhist scripture composed by Vasubandhu, 73.
Shing-Kiou-in shih, a Śastra composed by Arhat Gopa of Śrāvasti, 92
Shing-kwan (Prasenajit, the king of Śrāvasti who had hosted Buddha), 61
Shing-ming (Śabdavidyā-śāstra), 38.
Shing-shih-lun (Satyasiddhavyākarana-śāstra), 9
Shi-ta-shing, 7.
Shing-tu, capital of Sz chuen, xx, 7
Shing-wu-wai-lun, 154.
Sho-lun (Sānkhya), 162
Śreshṭhin, 110
Shuh (South-east China), 6, 7, 9, 19, 21.
Shun-shi (Lokāyata), 161.
Si-fan (Tibet), 12, 14.
Si-gan-fu, the western capital of China, 213, 215
Si-ming, a temple, 217
Si-yu-ki (Records of the Western Countries), v, x, xi, xxn, xxv xlii, 34n, 46n, 54, 66, 91n, 92n, 110n, 111n, 112n, 132, 144, 149, 152, 177, 215.
Siang-chow, 8
Siddhārtha, 146
Śīlabhadra, a famous Buddhist monk-scholar of Nālandā, 106, 108, 112, 120, 121, 140, 153, 155, 157, 158, 160, 161, 165, 169, 170, 171.
Śīlāditya, a name of Harshavardhana, xxviiin, 83, 119, 121, 148, 149, 150, 154, 155, 161, 167, 170, 171, 172 173, 175, 177, 179, 180, 183, 185, 186, 187, 189.
Śīlāditya-rāja (Harshavardhana), 90, 147.
Śīlaprabha, a Chinese Buddhist monk-scholar (Taou-lin), came to India, visited Kāmalankā, Kalinga, Tāmraliptı, Vajrāsana, Nālandā, Rājagṛiha etc. and finally proceeded to south India, xxxviii.

Simhachandra, a specialist of grammar, 190,
Simhala, xxxiv, 133, 134, 139, 141, 143, 145, 146
Simhaprabha, a specialist of Grammar, 193,
Simhapura, a Jaina pilgrimage in the Punjab, xli, 67, 191
Simhsramī, an eminent Buddhist priest of Nālandā, 160.
Simharasmī, a Buddhist monk-scholar of Nālandā, 163
Sin-chang, xxvii
Sin-che, xxviii, xxxii, xxxiv, xxxvi.
Sin-chiu, xxxiv.
Sin-chow, xl
Sin-lo (Corea), xxix
Sin-tu (Sindh), 63, 67, 151,
Sindh, xliii, 151.
Sindhu, 191
Sindhūka, 44n.
Śiśunāga, a ruling dynasty of Magadha before the advent of the Mauryas, 10ln.
Sitā, a river, 198, 199, 202.
Śiva, a Brāhmanical deity, xli
Śramana, Bnddhist bhikshu, 48, 87, 88, 95, 106n, 144, 176, 179, 184, 185, 208
Śrāvasti, 92.
Śreshthin, the elders, 50n.
Śrībhoja (Śrīvijaya or Palembang in Sumatra), xxv, xxvi, xxx, xxxv, xxxix, xl, xli
Śrīgupta a Brāhmanical conspirator of Rājagṛiha who desired to kill Buddha by fire concealed in the ditch and by poisoned food, xxxvi, 114
Śrīkshetra, place in Burma, xlii, 132.
Śrī-parvata (in Āndhra Pradesh), xxi
Śrī-parva, (Same as Srīparvata), xxi
Śrughna, Kālsi (Aśokan rock edict) in the Jaunsār district of the Uttar Pradesh, 78
Sse-en-temple, 215
Sse-pin, xxix, xxxii.
Stein, M.A., xxiin.

Sthānīśvara, Thānesar in the eastern Punjab which was the place of origin of Pushyabhūti dynasty from which Harshavardhana emeged, 78.

Sthavira, xxv, xlii, 95, 106, 117, 132, 133, 134, 137, 139, 144, 175, 214n

Sthiramati, a Buddhist scholar of Nālandā, 153.

Stūpa, x, 50, 55, 57, 58, 59, 63, 64, 67, 72, 77, 84, 85, 93, 94, 96, 97, 102, 114, 115, 117, 118, 119, 131, 133 134, 135, 137, 150, 156, 195, 200, 202 216

Su-kia-mi-to-lo (Sugatamitra), a Buddhist monk-scholar who had participated in the deliberations of the special Buddhist Council convoked by Kanishka, 70

Su-leh (Kashghar), 48, 208,

Su-li-sau-to, xxxviii.

Su-li-ye-t -po (Sūryadeva), a Buddhist monk-scholar who had participated in the deliberations of the special Buddhist Council convoked by Kanishka, 70.

Su-lu-kin-na (Śrughna), 78n

Su-po-sa-tu (Subhavāstu), a river in Udyāna 64.

Su-tu-li-sse (Sutṛishna), 45.

Su-yeh-chu or chui, river and town, 42.

Subhūti, a Buddhist priest of Dhanyakataka region, 137.

Sudāna, prince Viśvāntara, the hero of the Wessăn taro Jātaka 84.

Sudatta, another name of Anāthapindaka, 84n, 98.

Śūdra, scheduled caste of Indian society or the last Varna of the Hindu society, 79

Sugatamitra, one of the Buddhist monk-scholars who had participated in the deliberations of the special Buddhist Council convoked by Kanishka in Kaśmīr. 70

Sui-dynasty, one of the early ruling dynasties of China (A D 589-618), 2, 4

Sumatra, xxvi, xxx, xli, 188n

Sumeru, the legendary mountain of the Buddhist cosmological world, xiv, 11, 58, 88.

Sung-yu, 52, 64n, 129.
Śūrangama-sūtra (Leng yen ching), an early Buddhist scripture, Chinese rendering by Master Paramatī of central north India at Chih chih monastery, Canton, China, A. D. 705, commentary (abridged) by Ch'an Master Han Shan (1546-1623), 159n
Surāshṭra (Saurāshṭra), 150
Suratha (Surat), a town on the Western coast of India, 150, 153.
Śūrya, a Buddhist priest of Dhanyakaṭaka region, 137
Śūryadeva, one of the Buddhist monk-scholars who had participated in the deliberations of the special Buddhist Council convoked by kanishka in Kaśmīr, 170.
Sutta-piṭaka, xxvi, 71, 116, 117.
Suvāstu, a river, 65.
Śvetapura (supposed to be the village Ghoṭāro), a place between Vaiśālī and the Ganges river, 100.
Swastika, 102.
Sz-'ch'an, xl.
Sz' chuen (Shuen), a province of China, xxxvi, 6, 52, 149

T

Ta-ch'a-shi-lo (Takshaśilā), 67.
Ta-hia, north India or that part of north west Iudia conquered by the Yueti, also used as Tocharia, also a place in northwest India where the stūpas were erected by the Indo-Scythians, 136n.
Ta-hsio (Mahābodhi) xxx
Ta-kwan, officers in the Chinese terms, 42, 189, 190, 205
Ta-lo-sse (Taras) a town. 45.
Ta-mo-chi, an officer, 42.
Ta-mo-ki-li (Dharmākara), a Buddhist monk-scholar of Baktra (Fo-ho-lo) well versed in the Tripiṭaka,, 51.

Ta-mo-pi-li (Dharmapriya), a Buddhist monk-scholar or Baktra (Fo-ho-lo) well versed in the Tripiṭaka, 51

Ta-mo-sangkia (Dharmasiṁha), a Buddhist monk of Kashgar who had visited India before Hsuan-tsāng, 48

Ta-mo-si-ti, a place on the bank of the river Oxus 198.

Ta-mo-si-tie-ti (Tāmasthiti), a region situated between mountains bordering on the river Oxus, 197

Ta-pan-jo (Mahāprajñā), a Buddhist scripture, 114.

Ta-tsing-chu (Mahānīl pearl), 135

Ta-tu-sheh, an official, 47

Tagara, a perfume tree, the leaves of which are like those of the mountain ash, 149,

Tai-k' in, a Chinese region during the Han dynasty from where the Chang-kong, the family of Hsuan-tsāng's forefather descended, 1.

Tai-tsung, the most powerful figure of the brilliant T'ang dynasty (A. D. 618-909), who died in A. D 650 vi, 215.

Tajik (Hiu-chi), 198.

Takka, a region in the Punjab, 72, 74

Takshaśīlā, 67,191,199,203.

Tāmasavana - sanghārāma (Sultanpur), 76.

Tāmralipti, in Bengal, xxvi, xxxv, xxxviii, xl, xli,173.

Tan-kwong, a priest of China who visited India by the southern Chinese sea-route, xxxix

T'ang-dynasty (A D 618-906), vi, xxxv, xli, 5.

Tangut (Ho-si in China), Tanggod tribes of the Tibetan blood, 19n

Tao-hioh (the Chinese form of Mahābodhi) temple in Ching'an where Hsuan-tsāng studied Buddhist scriptures. 9.

Tao-sun, a famous Chinese historian who wrote the History of the Śākya family, xxn, xxin, 136n.

Taou-ching, one of the two disciples of Hwui-wei at Liang-chow' who accompanied Hsuan-tsāng during his journey to India but returned from the way, 13, 14

Taou-fang, a Chinese Buddhist monk who visited Nepal, xxx

Taou-hi, a Chinese Buddhist monk who visited India, lived at Nālandā, wrote abundant Buddhist sūtras and śāstras and died at Amarāvatī, xxix, xxx

Taou-lin (Śīlaprabha), a Chinese Buddhist monk who visited Indian Buddhist centres, xxxiii

Taou-sun, see Tao-sun, xxiin

Taou-sing (Chandradeva), a Chinese Buddhist monk (A D 649), visited Indian Buddhist centres through Tibet and Nepal, studied Hīnayāna Buddhism Returning to China through Nepal, he died, xxx, xxxi

Taras (Ta-lo-sse), a town, 45.

Tāranātha, a Tibetan Buddhist monk who visited India, xxn.

Tartars, vi, 203.

Taryastrimshas, a term of heaven occuring in the Buddhist cosmology 81.

Tathāgata, x, xi, xxn, xxxii, 3, 31, 50, 52, 57, 59, 62, 63, 65, 66, 67, 68, 71, 76 77, 82, 91, 92, 96, 67, 98, 99, 102, 105, 110, 114. 115, 116, 117, 120, 127, 131, 135, 140, 144, 145, 149, 150, 151, 152, 201, 206, 213.

Tattvasotya-Śāstra, 81,

Tau-chau, a region in China xxvii

Tau-K' au (nutmegs), 109

Tau-shih, calamine stone of Sindh region, 152.

Tcheka, see Takka, 50, 74

T'el'e, title of a ruling family of a Central Asian tribe, 48.

Teng-hiang-ting, vii.,

Thang-li (the mountain ash), 149.

Thera (Bhikshu), xxv.

Trayastrimshas, 91, 93 See Taryastrimshas

Tripiṭaka, xlii, xliii, xlvi, 51, 77, 78, 80. 81, 187, 139, 192.

Ti-shih (Śakra-rāja), 122
Ti - tsing - chu (Indranîl pearl), 185
Ti-wei, a town in the Pamir-Hindukush region, 50
Tibet, vi, xxviii, xxix, xxxiii
Tibetan, xxx, xxxi.
Tien-hwang, a temple at Hang-chow where Hsuan tsāng secretly retired for some time before his visit to India, 8
Tiladaka temple, a Buddhist temple near Nālandā, xli, 103, 153
To-fo-lo, 47, See Tu-ho-lo.
To-ho-shi-li (Tushāra or Tukhāra), xxx.
To-kiu, a Chinese governor, 13.
To-tsin, a town, 34.
Tocharia, 136n
Tsa-sin (Samyuktābhidharma), 39.
Tsah-liang Śāstra, 121.
Tsah-liang-lun, 136
Tsai-chau, xxix.
Tsau-ku-ch' a (Tsaukūṭa), 193.
Tsan-kung, a province of China, 7.
Tsan-tseu, father of Hsuan-tsāng, 2.
Tseh-kia (Takka), 72.
Tseu-wu, a valley in China, 6.
Ts' i dynasty, 1.
Tsih-shi, a mountain, 199.
Tsin, a chinese place name, 31.
Ts' in, a Chinese place name, 174.
Tsin-chow, a Chinese place name, 11
Tsin-yang, a Chinese place name, 5
Tsing-tu, a Buddhist convent at Loyang (the brother of Hsuan-tsāng was living as Buddhist), 3.
Tso-moh, a place in khotan region, 210
Tso-po-she, a Governor 212.
Tsuh, a direction in Chinese, 6
Tsung-ling, a mountain, 12, 27, 41, 45, 48, 198, 200, 209.
Tu-fan (Tibet), xxxi.
Tu-ho-lo (Tukhāra), xxxvi, 47, 52, 195.
Tu-lu-po-pa-cha (Dhruvabaṭṭa or Dhruvabhaṭṭa), a king of south India, 185.

Tu-she-sa-na, a Buddhist convent in Chīnapati (the Punjab), 76.
Tuh-kiuch (Turkish), 40, 195.
Tuh-po (without equal), an epithet given to Moksh-agupta, a Buddhist monk-scholar, 38.
Tukhara, xxviii, xxx, xxxvi, 57, 181, 196, 211.
Tun, a Chinese Buddhist scholar of China, 26
Tun-hwang, the Chinese Buddhist centre where one of the two novices accompanying Hsuan-tsāng went back from the way, 14.
Tun-wang, a place in China 210.
Tung-chu (copper pillars), xxxix.
Tung-oo, a place in Burma, xlii.
Turanian, 195n
Turk, 42, 43, 47.
Turkish, 40, 181n.
Turkestan (Turkistan), vi.
Turushka (the Turks), xxii xxiii.
Tushita, a term for heaven in the Buddhist cosmology, 66, 79, 88, 138, 217n.

U

U-chang-na (Udyāna), 64, 66.
U-che-yen-na (Ujjayanī), 150,
U-fa-tsun (Āditya), sun-god, 152.
U-lo · Ulak, post-horses (horses maintained at out posts of a country), 48.
U-sha (Och), 200.
U-sse-kia-lo (Hushkara), name of a temple in Kaśmīr, 68.
U-tan-lo-'an-sha-cha (Uttarāshādha) latter half of the Hindi month Āshādha, 95.
U-tien (kustana), an earth pap, a fountain near which is a stone. Beal thinks that the celebrated Gomati temple at Khotan was so called from "mother-earth" 203.
U-to-kia-han-cha (Uṭakhaṇḍa), a town Udabhāṇḍa or Udabhāṇḍapura, 64, 67, 192.

Udhita, a king who helped Hsuan-tsāng in carrying his load of books and images to China, 189, 190.
Udyāna, xxxvi, xliv, 64, 66, 192.
Udayana, a Buddhist king of Kauśāmbī, 91, 93, 211, 213.
Uda (Udra or Orissa), 134.
Uighur, 181n.
Ujjain, 148n.
Ujjayanī, 150.
Uṇādi, a term of Sanskrit Grammar, 122.
Upadeśa-Śāstra, 71.
Upādhyāya, a Buddhist teacher, 107.
Upagupta, 77, 78, 152.
Upāli, 77, 116.
Upāsaka, Buddhist Bhikshu, 109.
Uraśā, Kaśmīr, 68.
Uṭakhanda (Udabhānda or Uḍabhāndapura), 64.

V

Vairochana, Buddhist Bhikshu famous in the Khotanese Buddhist account, 205.
Vaiśālī, xxin, xxii, xxiii, xxiv, xxxv, xxxviii, 78n, 100, 101, 102, 117n, 118, 173, 214.
Vaiśeshika, a school of Indian Philosophy, 162.
Vaiśravana, the great spirit-king of the Buddhist legend, 55n.
Vaivartakalpa (Vaivarta-siddha-kalpa), a Buddhist work, 122.
Vajjis, xxin, xxii, xziii.
Vajra, son of Bālāditya, 111
Vajrāsana, Mahābodhi temple at Gayā, xxviii, xxxv, 102, 104.
Valabhi, 149.
Vakula, a Yaksha of Buddist legend, 127
Varāha (the wild boar), one of the ten Brāhmnical incarnations, xxvi.
Varanā (Varunā), a river associated with the life of Buddha, north-east of present Vārānasī town, 98
Varmavibhāshā-Vyākaraṇa, 84.
Vasubandhu (the famous Buddhist scholar who complied the Mahāyāna Buddhist scriptures), 63, 70, 73, 80, 81, 85, 86, 91.

Vasumitra, 70, 71.

Vāsupāla, the famous drunken elephant which was let loose by Devadatta to kill Buddha. Also known as Ratnapāla or Dhanapāla, 113n.

Vaṭi, term used for identifying Yue-chi tribe, xxiii, xxiv.

Veda, the pioneer Brāhmnical scripture, 75, 112, 123n, 153.

Veluvana (Bamboo garden) associated with the life of Buddha, xxxiv.

Vena, means literally "early riser", 106n

Vendidad, xxiv.

Vibhāshā, 39, 48, 51. 79, 80, 84, 121, 125

Vidyāmātra-Śāstra 86, 91, 139, 154, 157, 190.

Vihāra, a residential establishment of Buddhist learning, xxxii, 66, 82, 91, 93, 94, 95, 97, 98, 99. 102, 115, 119, 125, 126, 144, 146, 152.

Vihārapāla, protector of Vihāra, xxxvii.

Vihārasvāmī, protector of Vihāra, xxxvii.

Vijñāna - kāyapāda-Śāstra, 92.

Vimalakīrti, a Buddhist scholar of 169,

Vimalakīrti-sūtra, 100.

Vimalamitra, a well-versed Buddhist scholar of Sarvāstivāda school and a native of Kaśmīr, 80

Vinaya piṭaka, xxvi, xxix, xxxiii, xli, 7, 71, 77, 114, 117, 220.

Vinaya-vibhāśā-Śāstra, 72.

Vinītaprabha, a reputed Buddhist scholar of Chīnapati Vihāra, 76.

Virasana, 81.

Vīryasena, a Buddhist scholar, well-versed in Piṭakas at Bhadra-vihāra near Prayāga, 84.

Vishnu, a Brāhmnical god, x, xii.

Viśuddhasiṁha, 70.

Viśvāntara, Prince Viśvāntara, the hero of the Wessāntara-Jātaka, 84n.

Vulture-peak, see Gṛiddhrakūṭa.

Vyākaraṇa, 121, 122.

W

Wan-ki, a Buddhist priest of Kian-chan in China who retired to a lay life and resided at Śrīvijaya (Palembang), xxxiv.

Wan-yun, Buddhist scholar of Loyang (China) visited Cochin-China and came to Kalinga where he died, xxxv.

Wang, 20.

Wang-po (Matisiṁha), a Chinese Buddhist, came to Indian Buddhist centre but difficulties of Sanskrit learning compelled him to leave India, died in Nepal, xxxii.

Wang-siang, an officer, 21.

Wang-tong, a place in China which figured in connection with rebellion, rioting and other natural calamities under the Sui dynasty, (A. D. 589-618), 5.

Wang-tsun, an officer, 52,

Wang-un-tse, the Imperial ambassador of T'ang who was to visit India after death of Harshavardhana, 156.

Watters, Thomas, xiv.

Wessāntara Jātaka, 34n.

Wei-si-sse (Vaiśeshika), the expression used in text Shing-lune as a school of Buddhist logic, 162n

Weina, 106n See Vena,

Wou Hing (Prajñādeva), a Buddhist priest of China who came to India via Śrīvijaya (Palembang), stayed, studied and died at Nālandā, xli.

Wu, a region of China, 6, 9, 19,

Wu-cho (Asangha), brother of Vasubandhu and a great Buddhist scholar of Mahāsānghika school, 85.

Wu-cho-pu-sa (Asanga Bodhisattva), 65.

Wu-la-shi (Uraśā), 68.

Wu-pwan, a town, 34.

Wu-shan, 52.

Wu-teh-the T'ang ruler (A. D. 618), 5, 7.

Wu-tung, a tree, 17.

Wu-t'u (tiger cat), 67.

Yaksha, xxii. 65, 66, 72, 162, 177.

Yamarāja, the god of the Death in the Brāhmnical traditions, 133.
Yamunā, a river, 78.
Yang-kuei-fei (the green vistas), vii.
Yang-ti, the second emperor of the Sui dynasty (A.D. 605-617), 5.
Yanghi (O-ki-ni or Yenki), 34n.
Yashtivana, a hill near Nālandā, 153, 154
Yavana, xlii, 133, 136.
Ye-ma, a spring, 21, 22.
Yeh-hu, a rank of Kkan, 30, 42, 47.
Yeh-yeh, a river, 45.
Yen-mo-lo (Yamarāja), 133.
Yen-mo-na (Yavanas), xlii.
Yen-mo-na-chau (Yamrāja), 133.
Yen-tai, a place in China, 26
Yen-thsong, also written as Yen-tsaong, one of the two biographers of Hsuan-tsāng who wrote the latter five chapters of life and work of Hsuan-Tsāng in China after his return from India, xix, xx.
Yenki, o-ki-ni, also called yanghi or yanghi-Hissar, 34.
Yih-chan, a Chinese Buddhist monk also known as Huiming who left China in A. D. 565 and passed three years in Kalinga, xxxiii.
Yih-chiu (a tree), 22n.
Yoga-xli, 157, 210.
Yoga-bhūmi-śāstra, 174
Yoga-śāstra, 39, 85, 107, 108, 120, 121, 133, 139, 140, 153
Yoga-śāst-a-kārikā, 190
Yogāchāra-bhūmi-śāstra, 88, 169.
Yogāchāra - bhūmi-śāstra-kārikā, 152.
Yoh, a Buddhist monk of China, 9.
Yu--ssc-ti-lun (Yogāchāra-bhūmi-śāstra), 10.
Yu-kia-tin (Khotan), 48.
Yuan - chuang (Hsuan-tsāng), xiv.
Yuan-chwang (Hsuan-tsāng), xxiii.
Yuan-hwui, a Chinese Buddhist monk residing mainly in Kaśmīr, visited Bodhagayā and Gṛiddhrakūṭa, while going back to China through Nepal he died there xxiii.

Yue-chi, a Central Asian tribe, xxii, xxiii, xxiv
Yue-ti, same as Yue-chi, xxii, 32, 46n, 136n,
Yueh, 84n
Yuh-fa (gem of flower), 217.
Yuh-men, name of a barrier fixed on the western frontier in China, 13,16
Yung-hwei, a period of some years (A D 650-656) in Chinese history, xxx, 156.

Z

Zoroastrian, xxii.